Roosevelt to See Series Again, With Weaver Choice of Cronin.

Odds Drop, Giants Now 5-6 Favorites

Whitehill's 5-Hit Feat in 4-to-0 Win Yesterday Regains Prestige.

By Shirley L. Povich
(Sports Editor of The Post).

A city flushed with redeemed confidence in its ball team is host again today to the world series of 1933 that received the figurative stamp of Presidential approval last night with the announcement that President Roosevelt again would be in attendance.

In tribute to that triumph of the Nats over the Giants yesterday by the decisive 4-to-0 score, betting odds on the series underwent a sharp revision as Broadway commissioners erased the quotations of 3 to 1 against Washington to win the championship and posted new figures that rated the Giants favorites at only 5 to 6.

But for today's battle the Giants again are being backed into favoritism at odds of 4 to 5 in recognition of the talents of Carl Hubbell, their master of the screw-ball, who returns to the mound to oppose Monte Weaver, the choice of Manager Joe Cronin.

Impressive Revival.

The pitching that had helped to make them preseries favorites, the dynamite that had lain dormant in their bats, the dash that had carried them to American League heights, reasserted themselves in one furious and impressive revival yesterday and the Nats proclaimed their presence in the world series of 1933 by lashing out a victory over the Giants.

Carrying a record marked by two reverses into that third game, they staged what will be hailed in world series annals as the Nationals' Recovery Act in the presence of the author of the political version of that instrument. Before Presidential pomp and dignity at one end of the field and the spare-ribbed temporary bleachers half devoid of occupants at the other, the Nats restored American League prestige with their triumph.

Landslide Threat Dissipated.

Two to one in favor of New York the series now stands, but the ugly spectre of a Giant sweep, the ominous threat of a Giant landslide has been dissipated.

In Earl Whitehill, given to baseball by Cedar Rapids, Iowa, the Nats found the man to stem the Giant tide. In the skill of the southpaw ace of Joe Cronin's pitch-

Rockefeller, Jr., Asks for Curb On Rum Sales

Temperance Drive and Abolition of Crime Declared Vital.

New York, Oct. 5 (AP).—John D. Rockefeller, jr., outlined today two prime objectives in liquor control:

1. Abolition of lawlessness.

2. Focusing of all forces of society on development of self-control and temperance in the use of alcoholic beverages.

Any program offered in lieu of the eighteenth amendment, he declared, must make abolition of lawlessness "its chief aim, even if—and I weigh carefully what I say—the immediate result is temporarily away from temperance."

Regarding the second objective, he said:

"To develop the habit of temperance in individuals, to take up again the slow march of education—that is the real and fundamental approach to the problem of alcohol."

Foreword to Report.

Rockefeller's statements were a foreword to his forthcoming report on liquor control, made under his sponsorship by Raymond B. Fosdick, attorney, and Albert L. Scott, engineer.

Preparation of the report, based on world-wide studies of liquor control, began after Rockefeller a year ago declared for repeal in the interest of temperance.

"The mistake involved in passage of the eighteenth amendment," he said, "was the failure to foresee that it might not have public support.

One of the principles which the report develops is that only as the profit motive is eliminated is there any hope of controlling the liquor traffic in the interest of a decent society. To approach the problem from any other angle is to insure failure."

Taxes Held Incidental.

He said the report, to be published shortly, "regards liquor taxation primarily as a helpful factor in forwarding these objectives, and only incidentally as a means of producing income."

One of the principles stressed in the report, he added, "is that men can not be made good by force as law does not enforce itself."

Rockefeller, who like his father is a teetotaler, said it is his earnest conviction that "total abstinence is the wisest, best and safest position for both the individual and society."

"Failure of the eighteenth amendment has demonstrated the fact that the majority of the people of this country are not yet ready for total abstinence," he said, "at least when it is attempted through legal coercion.

Nurse Confesses Plot to Kidnap

Plea of Guilty Entered in Leffingwell Case.

New York, Oct. 5 (AP).—Nicolina de Palma, Yonkers nurse, pleaded guilty today to attempted extortion in connection with threats to kidnap a niece of Russell C. Leffingwell, partner in J. P. Morgan & Co.

She had pleaded not guilty when arraigned on Monday. At that time James Medley, gasoline station attendant, pleaded guilty. The pair will be sentenced Tuesday.

Medley and Miss De Palma were arrested in Yonkers after several letters demanding $10,000 had been received by Franklin A. Batcheller.

Pope and Duce Divine Agents, Says Cardinal

Naples, Oct. 5 (U.P.).—Cardinal O'Connell arrived today by motor from Rome and will sail for the United States Saturday, on the Vulcania.

"I marvelled at the work accomplished by Fascism," the cardinal said after visiting the vast reclaimed Pontine marshlands. "The Pope and Mussolini are exceptional men in their respective fields. Both were sent indubitably by a Divine Providence to systematize the world."

White House Nips Talk of Congress Session on Rum

There is not one chance in a thousand that President Roosevelt will call an extra session of Congress to deal with liquor taxes and imports.

That calculation came authoritatively from the White House yesterday in reply to a suggestion of Senator Robinson, Democratic leader, that the expected advent of repeal by December 6 might justify Congress in meeting at least a month before the regular session begins on January 1, to curb a torrent of imports.

Wet leaders believe the thirty-sixth ratification of repeal will be accomplished December 6. Sale of liquor, where it is not prohibited by State law, will be legal December 7, without awaiting the formality of a proclamation by the Secretary of State.

Pecora Runs For Prosecutor On McKee Side

He accepted, following consultation with Senate Banking Committee members.

"I agree to run only on condition campaign requirements will not sidetrack me for one second from the continued prosecution of this inquiry," Pecora told newspapermen.

Talks With Committee.

"I talked it all over with Senator Fletcher and other members of the committee. They all are of the opinion the committee's investigation will not run beyond January 1. With that understanding, I accepted."

The first to congratulate him as he left the Senate caucus room was Clarence Dillon, head of Dillon, Read & Co., New York banking firm, whose officers have been subjected to gruelling examination by Pecora for three days.

Pecora also met Senator Norbeck (Republican), South Dakota, former chairman of the Senate Banking Committee.

"I would like to see you win," said the South Dakotan. "New York needs a man like you."

Pecora Born in Italy.

The committee counsel, a native Italian, who worked his way through law school after coming to this country at the age of 4, declined to say whether he talked with Postmaster General Farley, who reputedly is behind McKee's candidacy.

He also refused to comment on rumors Tammany had offered him a place on their slate and he turned it down. Pecora was ignored by Tammany in 1929, when he sought nomination on his record made as chief assistant district attorney.

Pecora, a former Roosevelt Progressive who joined the Democratic ranks when the Bull Moose party

Air Glider Killed As Wing Collapses

Youth Making Practice Flight Crashes.

Wilmington, Del., Oct. 5 (AP).—Collapse of the wing of a glider shortly after it had been cut loose from a towing airplane piloted by Richard C. du Pont late today sent Edward R. Setz, 22 of Highland Park, Pa., crashing to his death in a field at Elsmere, near Wilmington.

Making a practice flight, Setz was towed to an altitude of 3,000 feet by du Pont, who last week at Waynesboro, Va., established a new American distance flight record for gliders.

Witnesses said while Setz was making a loop-the-loop one wing tore loose and swung toward the pilot, apparently knocking him unconscious. His untouched parachute was found in the wreckage.

Bandit Slashes Woman; Four Rob Brewery

Heurich Employes Forced to Lie on Floor While Thieves Get $1,646.

With one woman victim reported near death in Emergency Hospital, police were pushing their search for participants in two spectacular holdups late yesterday. One man escaped empty-handed after slashing the throat of a woman bakery proprietor, while four others escaped with $1,646 loot from the Chris. Heurich Brewing Co.

Mrs. Louise Zimmerman, 37, was attacked and stabbed by a colored man in her bakery shop at 1706 Seventeenth street, northwest. A few minutes later office employes of the Heurich company were forced to lie on the floor while three armed bandits escaped with a money bag.

Mrs. Zimmerman was alone in the front of her store when the colored man entered. He became angered at her refusal to give up the contents of a cash drawer, vaulted the counter and thrust a knife into her throat.

Screams Bring Help.

Her screams brought Rudolph Wehner, a baker, working at the ovens in a rear room. He grabbed a rolling-pin and struck the bandit. The man's arm was believed fractured by the blow.

Wehner's attack drove the bandit to the street. He dodged into the basement of an apartment at 1707 Seventeenth street.

Hospital physicians held little hope for Mrs. Zimmerman's recovery. Her husband, Lawrence Zimmerman, and their 13-year-old son, Lawrence, jr., were attending the world series game. They returned home and found a crowd of several hundred persons before the store.

Maj. Ernest W. Brown, superintendent of police, last night offered a reward for information leading to the apprehension of Mrs. Zimmerman's assailant.

Crime Well Planned.

Working as if the crime had been carefully planned, the three bandits robbed Heurich's Brewery a few minutes before an armored truck arrived to take the money to the bank.

Brandishing guns, three men entered the office while a fourth remained at the wheel of an automo-

Stock Market Evils Will Be Investigated

Roosevelt Orders Study as Basis for Law of Correction.

Research Not to Conflict With Senate Bank Practice Probe.

President Roosevelt has ordered an informal study of stock exchange practices, looking to corrective legislation at the January session of Congress, it was learned last night from an administration source.

Assistant Secretary of Commerce John Dickinson is directing the study, assisted by Undersecretary of Treasury Dean Acheson; Arthur Dean, New York attorney; A. A. Berle, Presidential adviser, and others.

It was said the inquiry will not conflict with the Senate Banking Committee's Wall street investigation. Digests of material analyzed by the President's advisory group may even be turned over to the committee, it was stated.

Submits Questionnaire.

As the Senate committee turned attention to bookkeeping methods and stock portfolios of Dillon, Read & Co.'s two investment trusts, Ferdinand Pecora, committee counsel, last night told The Post he has submitted a "formidable questionnaire" to New York Stock Exchange members.

The questionnaire will seek data on margin accounts, operations prior to the 1929 crash, and the so-called bull market of 1933, Pecora said, adding that by this means he hopes to avoid necessity of subpenaing a mass of books from New York Stock Exchange members. He hopes to lay analyses of the questionnaire before the committee early next month, he said.

President Roosevelt's suggestion of an independent and quiet study of stock exchange and investment house methods was made to Secretary of Commerce Roper, who selected Dickinson to head the group, it was learned last night.

Although the Dickinson group has instructions to compile a factual digest on which corrective legislation might be based, there was no intimation of what line this legislation might take.

To Ban Sensationalism.

Studies will lay emphasis on research rather than disclosures of the more or less sensational character that has marked some of the Senate Committee's hearings.

While no effort is being made to hush up the Senate Committee's Refuses to Testify in Probe of Attack.

Los Angeles, Oct. 5 (AP).—Acting on advice of counsel, Sidney Bartlett, screen writer and fiance of Alice White, film actress, refused to testify today at the grand jury investigation of an alleged plot to disfigure John Warburton, handsome actor.

Explaining his refusal, Bartlett said:

"My attorney and I plan to conduct an independent investigation of the attack on Warburton, and, until that is concluded, I prefer to make no statements."

Doolittle Will Scatter Ashes Of Thompson Over Cleveland

Cleveland, Oct. 5 (AP).—The ashes of Charles E. Thompson will be scattered over Cleveland from the air Sunday noon by Maj. James H. Doolittle, noted aviator, who set the Thompson Trophy race record of 252 miles an hour at the National air races here last year.

Associates of Mr. Thompson, who died in Washington last night, tonight announced funeral arrangements for the automotive genius, whose valve inventions made possible present high-speed automobiles and aircraft motors.

It was Mr. Thompson's wish, his associates said, that his ashes be scattered over the city.

Several well-known pilots besides Maj. Doolittle will attend services Saturday afternoon at St. Paul's Episcopal Church.

The body was returned from Washington tonight.

2 Killed, 35 Wounded In Spreading Strikes; Johnson, Richberg Split

Dispute on Code Causes Delay in Settlement of Mine Dispute.

NRA Chief "Amazed" at Interpretation Voiced by His Counsel.

Expressing himself as "utterly amazed" at the interpretation placed upon the coal code by Donald R. Richberg, NRA chief counsel, Recovery Administrator Hugh S. Johnson, revealed yesterday that a sharp difference of opinion exists between himself and Richberg, which has delayed settlement of the coal strike in the Pennsylvania bituminous fields.

Johnson and Richberg, it developed yesterday, have taken opposite views as to the application of the "check off" system of paying union dues in the bituminous mines owned by steel companies in Pennsylvania.

The wage agreement signed by operators in Applachian territory and the miners contains a provision under which union dues are to be deducted from miners' wages. Owners of "captive" mines, refusing to sign the agreement, agreed to abide by its terms, including wages, hours and working conditions.

Johnson said last night that Richberg had privately assured steel representatives the "check-off" did not come under "working conditions," and would not be applicable to "captive" mines, but the administrator declared he had an understanding of these conditions directly opposed to that of his chief counsel.

"The steel companies agreed with the President to put in the same hours, wages and working conditions as were contained in the commercial miners' contracts," the administrator said. "When the miners came to ask for the check-off, the steel people refused. My interpretation is that the check-off was included in the same working conditions, but Richberg interpreted it the other way.

"I was utterly amazed when I learned he had made such an interpretation to the steel people before they signed."

Richberg last night was conferring with Gov. Henry Horner, of Illinois, having gone there in an effort to bring about a settlement between mine operators and miners who are on strike.

Gale Sweeps Sea, Brushing Florida

Believed Between Nassau and Bahama Isles.

Miami, Fla., Oct. 5 (AP).—The tropical disturbance that brushed the lower Florida East Coast with strong winds, today apparently was central between Nassau and West End, Bahamas Islands.

Richard W. Gray, Government meteorologist here, expressed belief the disturbance was moving east northeastward at sea.

The storm swung away from the Florida coast to follow an easterly route. Key West was the only Florida city to experience gale winds. Two persons were injured here and one at Hollywood.

Woman Charges She Was Kidnaped

Widow of Capitalist's Son Forced Into Rest Home.

Columbus, Ohio, Oct. 5 (AP).—A charge that she had been virtually kidnaped from Long Island was made at guardianship proceedings in probate court here today by Mrs. Marian C. Warner, widow of the late William Deshler Warner, son of Randolph Warner, Columbus capitalist.

The proceedings were instituted by Mrs. Warner's sisters, Exie C. Moran and Helen C. Bell, of Columbus. Mrs. Warner, brought to a rest home here recently, testified the two women abducted her from Long Island at the instance of the Deshler family.

Hitler Decrees Death if Editors Voice Treason

German Press Placed Under Absolute Rule by Act of Reich.

Berlin, Oct. 5 (AP).—The Reich today threw out of the window the principle of the freedom of the press as understood in America, set up the death penalty for circulation of treasonable articles and placed German newspaper workers under the thumb of the authorities.

A series of drastic laws, passed by the cabinet and signed by Chancellor Hitler, made the publishing of treasonable articles abroad or the introduction of them into Germany punishable by death and made journalism a licensed profession in which Aryanism and Nazi patriotism were set up as necessary qualifications.

Penitentiary sentences ranging up to five years were provided for those distributing "atrocity" or anti-Nazi material.

Goebbels Explains.

Dr. Joseph Goebbels, minister of public enlightenment, who claimed to believe other nations would copy the plan within the next five to seven years, explained in these words:

"The concept of the absolute freedom of the press is pronouncedly liberalistic and proceeds not from the people in its entirety, but from the individual." This, he said, did not mean the newspaper profession would be fettered, but rather that the State moved in and took the place of the publisher.

"It is the absolute right of the State," Goebbels continued, "to supervise formation of public opinion and see that it does not pursue paths leading away from the common weal.

"The more freedom of opinion that is conceded to an individual, the more it can harm the interests of the entire people.

German Press Curbed.

"The conception of freedom of opinion in its absolute over-estimate has been badly shaken throughout the world.

"The German press hereafter must be singleminded in will and many-sided in expressing this will."

To give teeth to the new classification of the newspaper profession, a system of registration will be introduced. Through this Dr. Goebbels' department can keep close watch on the situation. Rule-breakers will be booted out. Special courts will deal with the cases.

Kultur Protected.

Only German citizens of Aryan ancestry, those who have not married nonaryans and those who have not lost their public rights will be permitted "to influence public opinion," and these must swear not to write so as to "weaken German military idealism, kultur, or trade, or offend religious feelings."

Foreign correspondents will not be affected.

Another law passed by the cabinet provided the death penalty for killers or attempetd killers who, actuated by political reasons, sought to slay officials, judges, witnesses or members of the storm troops or Steel Helmets. The act applies even in the absence of premeditation.

Fliers Land in India, Failing to Set Record

London, Oct. 5 (AP).—A Reuters New Agency dispatch from Karachi, India, late today said the French long-distance fliers, Jean Assolant and Rene Lefebvre, had landed there, ending an unsuccessful attempt to beat the distance flight record held by their two countrymen, Paul Codos and Maurice Rossi.

Troops Disperse Rioters Storming Illinois Pit; 5,000 Shots Fired.

200 Deputies Hurl Gas Bombs at Pickets in Pennsylvania.

Simultaneous strike clashes in Pennsylvania, Illinois, Ohio and California resulted in the death of two men yesterday and the wounding of 35 other persons, including three passersby.

One fatality occurred at Ambridge, Pa., when 200 deputy sheriffs battled pickets at a tube plant with tear gas and guns. Fifteen participants were wounded.

A member of a vigilante committee was shot to death in a grape-pickers' riot at Lodi, Calif.

In a mine siege between rival unions near Harrisburg, Ill., more than 5,000 shots were fired and order was not restored until militia with fixed bayonets took charge. Sixteen coal workers and three tourists were shot.

Tear gas was again used at Stubenville, Ohio, to disperse 1,000 strikers trying to keep steel workers from returning to the mill.

Troops Halt Siege.

Harrisburg, Ill., Oct. 5 (AP).—The siege of Peabody Mine No. 43, and bombing of homes, a hotel and a railroad bridge were stopped today by State troops with fixed bayonets after a reign of terror lasting many hours. A score of men were wounded.

The army of 1,500 snipers, who had poured a shower of lead into the mine and fired on United Mine workers bound for work, vanished as the first of six National Guard companies double timed to the scene.

The gunners, symphatizers with the Progressive Mine Union, left one of their own men wounded and shot a dozen United Mine workers and three tourists on State Route 13 in the bitter fight for jobs. Barred from work in the home field by the company's contract with the United Mine Workers, the Progressives drew a 15-mile battle line around the mine.

The Big Four Railroad bridge near the mine property was dynamited, power lines were cut, and the Grand Hotel at Eldorado was wrecked by a mob.

Wholesale casualties were probably saved by the retreat of the column of United Mine Workers from Williamson County, when their vanguard, the armored car in front, ran into the ambush stretched along Highway 13.

J. H. Travers, Rosiclare, a druggist driving to St. Louis with his family, received a charge of buckshot in the face as his car ran the gauntlet of the pickets. Lewis Dodd and William Bowers, Raleigh, were hurt slightly as they rode to work in a Harrisburg plant. A number

Gold Owner Indicted Again

U. S. Specifies Two New Counts in Bill Against New York Lawyer.

New York, Oct. 5 (AP).—New indictment charging gold hoarding was returned by hte Federal grand jury today against Frederick B. Campbell, lawyer-capitalist already indicted for alleged failure to report possession of 27 bars of gold bullion.

Meanwhile Campbell filed a demurrer to the first Government charge that he failed to make known, under the Congressional gold hoarding act and Presidential decree, possession of $200,573.34 worth of the yellow metal held by the Chase National Bank as custodian.

Campbell already has filed suit against the bank for return of the gold.

The new indictment contains two counts, specifying actual hoarding, as well as failure to report possession. The maximum penalty is 10 years' imprisonment, of $10,000 fine, or both, for each offense.

Dodd Sees U. S. In Relief War

Envoy, at Dinner in Berlin, Tells How Roosevelt Fights Depression.

Berlin, Oct. 5 (AP).—William E. Dodd, Ambassador to Germany, tonight declared in an address that President Roosevelt was proceeding in his battle against economic conditions as if he were in a state of war.

Mr. Dodd, speaking at an American Club dinner given in his honor by the American colony, discussed "the dilemma in the United States" and diagnosed problems confronting all industrial nations.

Historically tracing the development of industrialism, he said:

"President Roosevelt and Chancellor Hitler have a second and basic hostile force to deal with. There is no more free land and a few people would take it if there were."

"The depression," the ambassador continued, "is more fixed than those following the Napoleonic, the Civil and the Franco-Prussian Wars."

Edward Hayes, Illinois, Made Legion Head

National Preparedness and War on Communism Demanded.

Chicago, Oct. 5 (AP).—Edward Hayes, 42, attorney of Decatur, Ill., tonight was vested with leadership in carrying out the American Legion's intensive program combating Communism, supporting the NRA and strengthening national defense. He succeeds Louis A. Johnson.

Hayes was elected commander by acclamation today at the close of the legion's fifteenth annual convention. The first duty assigned him was to work for fulfillment of the legion's four-point program for veterans' relief.

The program seeks to guard the interests of veterans injured or who contracted disease in military service.

Hospitalization Asked.

A request they be given free Federal hospitalization if unable to pay was the only clause dealing with veterans beset by ailments since the end of the war. The bonus was not mentioned.

Perhaps the strongest language used by the convention was that embodied in the report dealing with Communism.

The report declared against diplomatic recognition of Soviet Russia and also against extending credit to the Russian government or its agencies.

Reduction of all immigration quotas by 90 per cent also was called for.

Preparedness Urged.

"A whole-hearted fight by every citizen" for preservation of the Government and the principles of Democracy was called for, and in that section "a tendency in some quarters to make education appropriations carry more than their share of reductions for the sake of economy" was deplored.

"We believe America will never seek a war," the legion said regarding national defense, "and that a war will never seek a prepared America."

The defense recommendations then went on to call for a regular army of 14,000 officers and 165,000 men, a National Guard of 210,000 enlisted men with proportionate officers, a reserve corps of 120,000 officers, increase in the reserve officers' training camps, citizens' military training camps with 50,000 youths entered each year, a navy equal to the limits of the London naval treaty, and a congressional committee to increase the efficiency and the size of the Nation's air force.

Pecora to Seek Prosecutor Post

Pecora Hits at Tammany.

New York, Oct. 5 (AP).—Ferdinand Pecora, counsel to the Senate Banking Committee, today struck back at Tammany Hall by becoming an independent Democratic candidate for district attorney in Manhattan. He will continue his work with the committee.

Pecora joined forces with Joseph V. McKee, independent mayoralty candidate, who is leading a Democratic revolt against Tammany.

A few years ago Tammany thwarted Pecora's ambition to become district attorney.

Pecora came into the political picture less than an hour after the Bronx County Democracy, dominated by Edward J. Flynn, McKee backer, openly broke with Tammany.

Meanwhile, McKee cut deeper into Tammany's ranks by announcing "the next borough president of Manhattan will be James J. Hoey," who managed Mayor O'Brien's campaign last year, and was floor leader for Alfred E. Smith at the 1928 national convention.

McKee announced Dr. Joseph J. Baker, president of the Jewish Hospital, as candidate for borough president of Brooklyn, and James J. Lyons, Flynn nominee, for borough president of the Bronx. Samuel Foley, Democratic incumbent, was named for district attorney of the Bronx.

The Bronx executive committee drew into the complicated situation the names of President Roosevelt, former Gov. Alfred E. Smith and Gov. Herbert H. Lehman as the reason behind their public indorsement of McKee.

Postmaster General Farley was accused by LaGuardia of supporting the Independent mayoralty candidacy of McKee because he has ambitions of becoming governor of New York and "even has his eye on 1940." LaGuardia said he based his statement on information "direct from friends in Washington."

"On the one side the Tammany organization is seeking to hold its control for four more years," LaGuardia told the Young Republican Club. "On the other side, Farley is holding out the threat of Federal patronage while building up a machine of his own, because he has ambitions to be governor of New York and even has his eye on 1940. That I get direct from friends in Washington.

"The people of the country, the State and the city are getting a spectacle of filthy politics in New York," he said.

Charity Stamps to Be Topic.

Dr. Ellis Haworth will speak on "Charity Stamps of the World" before the Society of Philatelic Americans Tuesday night at 1900 R street northwest. Charity stamps are issued by several European countries to raise relief funds.

Rev. Robert J. White Named National Legion Chaplain

Catholic U. Law Faculty Member Honored by Convention.

The Rev. Robert J. White, formerly of Watertown, Mass., and now a member of the School of Law of Catholic University at Washington, yesterday was elected national chaplain of the American Legion in Chicago.

The new chaplain has a record for distinguished service in the Navy and has held various offices in legion posts in his home State. He was commissioned an ensign in 1917 and a short time later promoted to first lieutenant, junior grade.

Later he was promoted again, this time to the rank of lieutenant, senior grade. Much of Chaplain White's service was in the transport service from 1917 to 1919, although he saw special service in the United States, England, France, Italy, Russia and Yugoslavia, being gassed and wounded overseas.

He received his A. B. degree from Harvard University in 1915. Before entering the priesthood, he distinguished himself at the Massachusetts bar, where he was assistant district attorney of Middlesex County.

He has been professor of criminal law and legal ethics at the School of Law of the Catholic University since the fall of 1931. He was born in Concord, Mass., September 12, 1893, and resides now at Caldwell Hall on the university campus.

Transfers from existing Federal agencies rather than new employes will be used for the personnel of the new Federal Surplus Relief Corporation, it was announced yesterday.

The new agency will purchase surplus food products and other commodities to augment existing relief plans, according to Harry L. Hopkins, Federal Emergency Relief Administrator.

Hopkins also announced an additional grant of $200,000 to Puerto Rico had been made without requiring Federal money be matched by the territory's funds.

A $50,000 allotment to New Mexico for unemployment relief in the next two weeks also was announced.

British Envoys, U. S. Officials In Debt Parley

Brief Conference Is Held as Prelude to Solving London's Problem.

(Associated Press.)

British and American spokesmen discussed world economic conditions yesterday as a prelude to their study of methods of solving the London government's war debt problem.

Sir Frederick Leith-Ross and Sir Ronald Lindsey, representing Great Britain, met Dean Acheson, Undersecretary of the Treasury, and Frederick Livesey, assistant economic advisor to the State Department, for a brief, informal conversation.

With the time of the next meeting indefinite, Acheson, Secretary Hull and Undersecretary Phillips, of the State Department, went to see President Roosevelt late in the day for a thorough discussion of the debts situation and to receive instructions.

Possibility arose that the British were not prepared to make a definite offer for settlement of the $4,465,810,000 debt, but will formulate proposals as the study proceeds. Sooner or later, however, Washington officials expect a lump sum offer to be made.

Primarily, the conferees face the task of compromising two opposing viewpoints. Settlement low enough to satisfy popular British opposition to continued payments, officials believed, would be too low to meet approval of Congress, which is on record against reduction or cancellation.

Yesterday's meeting ended after a half hour's discussion and the British delegates afterward were guests of Sir Ronald at the world series game.

The first plane equipped for sleeping carried only two berths. It is an experiment by Eastern Air Transport, which plans to install berths on all its night planes.

Dallas Jailer and Butcher Convicted in Bailey Escape

Dallas, Tex., Oct. 5 (AP).—A Federal court jury late today convicted Thomas L. Manion, former Dallas jailer, and Grover C. Bevill, butcher, on charges of assisting Harvey Bailey to escape from the Dallas County jail Labor Day.

Bevill pleaded guilty and was the principal Government witness against Manion, who did not testify.

Bevill testified Manion told him "he could put over a deal to make $250 and would give me $125."

The witness said Manion asked him to get a gun and hacksaw blades and he complied. The next day, he said, Manion asked for three more blades and some shells.

"I gave them to Manion the same night," Bevill testified. "Yes, I asked about the other blades and he said he and Bailey had tried them and they were no good."

Bailey sawed the bars of his cell, held jail attendants at bay with a pistol and forced a turnkey to accompany him on a motor car dash to Ardmore, Okla.

Fatal Forest Blaze Blamed On Backfire

Los Angeles Holds Inquiry in Cremation of 27 Workmen.

Los Angles, Oct. 5 (AP).—Evidence given at a hearing into the Griffith Park forest fire indicated today a back fire, started innocently, may have created the trap in which at least 27 workers perished Tuesday.

Edward W. Thompson, 60, shift "boss," was named by two witnesses as the man who started a backfire to head off the main blaze, but Thompson denied this.

"I started to get my men out of there," Thompson said, "some said they were going to start a backfire. I told them I didn't care what they did, I was going to get my men out."

F. F. George, a county worker, voluntarily admitted at the hearing that he had set one backfire, but declared that to the best of his knowledge it was the main blaze farther up the hill which was caught by the wind and sent into the canyon.

Vivid testimony was provided by Marvin Page, who ran from the fire scene across a ridge in the park to his bulldog tractor and cut a swath across the path of the blaze, possibly saving many lives.

"That fire was just whizzing and roaring at me," said Page.

Fire Chief Ralph Scott said he was certain the back-fire was responsible for the deaths, but Mrs. Socha said blame could not be placed on whoever started the backfire.

"Under the stress of excitement, he probably set the back-fire with the best of intentions," she said.

Meanwhile, county workers attempted to check families and relatives of each of the 3,784 workers in the park, to determine whether there may have been other victims.

County Charities Superintendent, Earl Jensen, announced that families of those killed will receive compensation under schedules of the State Industrial Accident Commission, regardless of the outcome of a case before the courts to determine whether relief workers should receive such compensation.

D. C. Man Divorces Mate, Now Rewed

Finish Written Here to U. S.-Polish Romance.

Echoes of an international romance were heard yesterday when an interlocutory decree divorcing Roland H. Rowe from Mrs. Elvina Rowe Stalinski was signed by Justice Jennings Bailey in District Supreme Court. Mrs. Stalinski was not represented by counsel. She is said to be in Poland.

Under questioning by his attorney, Raymond Neudecker, Rowe testified he never to his knowledge was divorced by Mrs. Stalinski. Neudecker introduced in evidence a clipping from The Washington Post of February 28, 1931, telling of the marriage of his client's wife to Jan Stalinski.

The article reported Stalinski, former second secretary of the Polish Legation here before that office was elevated to an embassy, and the then Mrs. Rowe were married in Warsaw.

Mrs. Stalinski often appeared at diplomatic functions as a singer. She is widely known in Washington social circles.

When the suit was first filed, Mrs Stalinski answered she divorced Rowe in Poland before marrying Stalinski.

The "player" asked Dietz to visit a fictitious address nearby and bring a supply of bats and gloves to the ball park. He required the boy to turn over his receipts, $1.95, and a pen and pencil set valued at $7.50 as a guarantee of his honesty.

Deputies Kill Picket.

Ambridge, Pa., Oct. 5 (AP).—Behind a barrage of bullets, tear gas and swinging riot sticks 200 deputy sheriffs charged a disorderly picket line at the Spang-Chalfant Seamless Tube Co.'s plant here today, killing 1 man and wounding at least 15 others.

This was the first fatality since labor unrest flared into violence in the Pittsburgh industrial district.

Adam Petesuski, 42, of Ambridge, was shot in the neck and died while being taken to a hospital.

The deputies, led by Sheriff Charles J. O'Laughlin, ordered the pickets to drop clubs and other weapons and disperse. Some of the pickets complied and fell back, but others held their ground.

A sharp order was given. A tear-gas attack was unleashed and guns began to blaze. Through clouds of tear gas men could be seen on the ground. Above them stood women shrieking epithets.

Ambulances rushed to the scene and took the wounded to hospitals in Swickley and Rochester.

Tear Gas Hurled.

Steubenville, Ohio, Oct. 5 (AP).—Police and deputy sheriffs hurled tear gas bombs into a mob of 500 strikers late today after pickets stoned employes of the Weirton Steel Co. Half a dozen men and several women in the picket line were arrested.

Several persons were trampled as the crowd scattered to escape the gas.

March Here Planned.

Paterson, N. J., Oct. 5 (AP)—Leaders of all elements affected by the Paterson silk strike today agreed to join forces in a march on Washington to prevent, if possible, adoption of the cotton finishers' code.

Four busloads of strikers will leave Paterson Sunday morning. They will be joined at the Capital by a delegation of Paterson civic and business leaders, merchants and members of the Chamber of Commerce.

Senator Hamilton F. Kean and Representative George N. Seger have promised to attend the hearing on behalf of the Paterson delegation.

Pickets Start Today.

Edgewater, N. J., Oct. 5 (AP).—The Ford strikers board of strategy tonight completed plans for the invasion of Michigan to picket the huge Ford Motor Co. plants in Detroit and Dearborn.

The zero hour for the picket caravan departure, originally scheduled for today, was set for late tomorrow when from 200 to 500 picked men will start in a motorcade of from 50 to 80 automobiles.

Moose Leaders Rally to Aid Senator Davis

Council Members Say He Was "Spiritual Head" of Order.

New York, Oct. 5 (AP).—Senator James J. Davis was pictured at his trial on charges of violating the Federal Lottery laws today as the "spiritual leader" of the Loyal Order of Moose who, according to accounts, "had been more or less holding the bag."

"In the 17 years I have known Senator Davis," declared a witness, Albert J. Sartori, of Spokane, Wash., "he has always stood for the finest in fraternal life."

The charges against Davis grew out of a series of charity balls conducted by the Moose.

As Sartori, a former member of the supreme council, testified the Pennsylvania Senator did not exercise a "great deal of influence" in the order, Davis occupied himself by tracing circles on a sheet of paper.

Jurors Hear Ball Score.

Testifying about the transfer of $125,000 to the organization department of the Moose, a department which the Government contends Davis owned, Sartori said not a penny of the money went to Senator Davis.

At one point, Judge Johnson Hayes interrupted to tell the jury how the ball game was going.

"Off the record, gentlemen," he said, "if you are wondering about the ball game, the Giants are not winning."

The judge was receiving an inning-by-inning account from a deputy marshal, stationed at his side.

Never Issued Orders.

Still referring to the alleged gift of $125,000, Sartori said:

"Somebody said Senator Davis had been more or less holding the bag for the order and ought to be reimbursed through the organization department."

"Do you know of a single instance when Senator Davis issued an order as director general?" asked Defense Counsel Charles H Tuttle.

"He did not."

Tuttle asked Sartori if it was the intention of the Moose officers to give awards in the charity balls based on lot or chance.

"The thought never entered our heads," replied the witness.

Sartori said Davis was opposed to "punch boards."

William M. Smith, retired shoe manufacturer of Rochester, N. Y., and a supreme councilman of the Moose, told of a council meeting at Sharon, Pa., in August, 1930, describing the occasion as "a homecoming for our Jim."

"And," asked Tuttle, "did Senator Davis (Jim) play in the band that he played in as a boy?"

"He did that," replied Smith.

President Orders Study of Market

disclosures, the impression is growing in official circles that the President does not care to unnecessarily disturb the banking situation at a time when the bank rehabilitation program is in progress.

Coincident with the formation of this research group, the Senate Banking Committee yesterday indicated it will terminate its investigation by the first of the year.

Pecora Presses Quiz.

Meanwhile, there was no let-up in the vigor with which Pecora pressed his examination of Dillon, Read & Co. officials, now before committee's Wall Street bar.

Yesterday he charged directors of two investment trusts associated with the banking house were in a position to dispose of stocks of firms with which they are personally identified, through the trust's portfolios.

Charles Hayden, of Hayden & Stone, New York brokerage firm, and Matthew C. Brush, also identified with outside brokerage operations, were directors of United States & Foreign Securities Corporation, or United States & International Securities Corporation, organized by Dillon, Read & Co., Pecora brought out.

Claims Plan Ethical.

Robert E. Christie, jr., a Dillon, Read & Co. partner, denied there was anything "unethical" in the relationship. Recommendations of individual directors for purchase o stock for the trusts' portfolios were subject to check of the other directors, he pointed out.

Counsel passed most of the morning in quizzing Ernest D. Tracy, president of both United States & Foreign Securities Corporation and United States & International Securities Corporation.

He developed that Tracy was also a director of the Associated Gas & Electric Co., pointing out the two investment trusts headed by Tracy held more than 45,000 shares of the stock of Associated Gas & Electric.

Tracy told the committee he received no salary as president of the two trusts. He was given, however, options on 15,000 shares of the stock of one of the companies at $25 a share, and on 5,000 shares of the other company, at the same price, he testified. Both of the stocks were bringing more than twice that amount in the market.

The committee counsel questioned bookkeeping methods of the two trust companies whereby "book value" of stocks in their portfolios was used as synonymous with "cost" value.

Pecora insisted "book value" should not have been identified with "cost" in the entries.

Briton Urges Nazi Boycott By U. S. Labor

Resolution Placed Before A. F. of L. Convention Wins Support.

A boycott campaign against German goods was given impetus at the American Federation of Labor convention last night after a British delegate declared Adolph Hitler responsible for an "antilabor drive in Europe to enslave the masses."

If the campaign succeeds and the convention votes the boycott, the purchasing power of 4,000,000 A. F. of L. members and their families will be directed to curtail German imports.

President William Green promised the convention would make some protest against the German chancellor.

Will Fight Dictators.

"I am confident American labor will stand with the labor of Great Britain and of the world in opposition to the oppressive tactics used by dictators wherever they may be found," he said.

The boycott, sponsored by the federation's executive council, has been proposed in resolutions placed before the convention by the American Federation of Teachers and the Cleaners, Dyers, Spotters and Pressers Union.

The question is expected to meet opposition on the floor from members, who, through condemning Hitlerism, believe the boycott unjustified inasmuch as the A. F. of L. has refused to boycott Italian and Russian products because of Mussolini and Stalin.

Banquet for McGrady.

While the boycott leaders were seeking further support, 500 were attending a banquet at the Willard Hotel given by friends of Edward F. McGrady, the A. F. of L. man recently made Assistant Secretary of Labor. Among those attending were Gen. Hugh S. Johnson, recovery administrator; Senator Wagner, of New York, chairman of the national labor board; Secretary of Labor Perkins, Dr. Leo Wolman, chairman of the NRA labor advisory board; Postmaster General Farley, Gerard Swope, president of the General Electric Co.; Mrs. C. C. Dumsey, chairman of the NRA Consumers Advisory Board; Frank Morrison, secretary, and William Green, president, of the A. F. of L.

Though the Hitler boycott measure has been in the background of the convention since it started, the fight was brought to the fore by the speech of James Rowan, a fraternal delegate from the British Trade Union Congress.

The movement started by Hitler "as a tool for industrialists" who sought to regain power, he said, has so spread through Europe, that while the United States is forging ahead with the NRA, England's government is doing all it can "to worsen matters by preaching no more spending, longer hours of labor and a lower living standard."

Fight for Freedom.

He characterized this as typical of the "reactionarism" settling upon Europe and as "about the maddest policy anyone outside of a lunatic asylum ever tried to impose upon any sane people."

"I do not exaggerate," he declared, "when I say my fellow trades unionists at home and in Europe at large feel our organized movement is in a struggle to decide for generations to come whether they shall remain free or become enslaved under an economic and political tyranny more oppressive than history has known."

The destruction of German trade unionism by Hitler who within 24 hours disbanded the membership of 8,000,000, imprisoned or exiled its leaders and suppressed its journals, he charged was part of a "sinister conspiracy on the part of the former ruling classes" financed by industrialists not only in Germany, but in France.

"It is alleged, too, that your own Henry Ford contributed to Hitler's financial resources," Rowan said. This latter allegation, I am sure, has been denied," he added.

Britons Watching NRA.

A different picture was painted by J. A. Hall, another British delegate, who, while declaring the greatest danger to the Roosevelt program lay in Wall Street interests, declared the British want to see its effect before they follow.

Pointing out the British Labor party fell in 1931 "because it did not size up the power of the banking fraternity," he said, "it is clear the greatest obstacle President Roosevelt will have to meet is that from the bankers and financiers.

F. J. White, Canadian delegate, declared Canada, as well as England, is studying the American experiment.

Meanwhile, a resolution to again place the federation on record as demanding release of Warren K. Billings and Thomas J. Mooney from the California prison to which they were committed as the outgrowth of a San Francisco preparedness parade in 1916 was introduced by the State federation.

Another, seeking appointment of a labor strategy board "to map policies for strengthening the united action of the regular craft unions and strengthening organization in those industries in which the present organization obviously has not been successful," was introduced by Miss Elizabeth Christman, of the International Glove Workers Union.

Foreign Banks Under Heavy Guard in Cuba

Bomb Plot Brings Quick Action by Havana Authorities.

Havana, Oct. 5 (AP).—Heavy police guards were placed tonight around all foreign banks in Havana after the manager of the local Bank of Nova Scotia informed police he had been advised of a plot to bomb his institution.

An extra heavy guard scrutinized all packages carried by persons entering the Nova Scotia Bank.

Except for a reported revolt in Camaguey Province, advices tonight through storm-crippled communications indicated a quiet situation throughout the island. Camaguey dispatches told of the revolt of Atilano Sifontes, who took arms with a few followers in defiance of the Grau San Martin government.

Concern for the welfare of military officers imprisoned after the battle in the National Hotel occupied a position of prominence in the political picture. Wives of the officers tonight called on Spanish-American War veterans and American Legionnaires asking the veterans to intervene.

The labor situation was improved, with settlement of strikes in the Mantanzas and Havana plants of the Hershey interests permitting the reopening of a number of mills. The Hershey Electric Railway between Havana and Mantanzas resumed operations.

Graham Granger, American manager for the Hershey interests, was en route to Washington.

The Grau regime was recognized by both Panama and Uruguay, the ministers of both countries calling at the state department to make formal notifications.

Ickes Tells A. F. of L. That All Will Be Started in Ten Days.

The American Federation of Labor, in convention here, yesterday was informed by officials of the Public Works Administration that work is under way on public works projects totaling $400,000,000, and that by the middle of this month work will have been started on others carrying authorization for $500,000,000. The statement followed a proposed resolution of the A. F. of L. criticizing delays.

Answering critics of the Public Works Administration at a press conference following a meeting of the Public Works Board, Secretary Ickes, administrator, said it could be proved that there were no delays in allotment of funds.

The Secretary declared that much of the delay heretofore encountered in distributing money was caused by "what is claimed to be unreasonably high wages set by the public works administration." He added that labor interests had been largely responsible for wage rates specified by the administration. He asserted that one way to avoid local delays would be to cut the wage rate, but he had no comment to make as to his attitude on wage cutting.

Other officials challenged the critics who have been pointing to the fact that only $68,194,084 had been withdrawn from the Treasury for expenditure on public works while Congress authorized expenditure of $3,300,000,000. They said that other heavy expenditures had been made, such as the $5,000,000 cost of housing and rail construction at Boulder Dam, and cost of manufacturing 52,000 tons of steel for the Hudson tube.

Construction already is under way on 414 highways, 121 thoroughfares into and through cities and towns, and 132 secondary roads, to be paid for out of the $400,000,000 already allocated for highway purposes.

16 Tramps in Police Court Dramatize Jobless Problem

Men, Held After Roundup in Railroad Yards, Tell of Defeats.

Sixteen men representing many walks of life from widely separated States appeared before Judge Gus A. Schuldt charged with trespassing on railroad property.

The group, found sleeping in box cars, included three youths less than 20 years old, miners, steel workers, a hotel man and a railroader who testified he had been discharged after 15 years of service.

They all testified they have been out of employment for the past three years and that since losing their regular jobs, have been able to obtain only temporary employment.

Judge Schuldt released 15 of the men on personal bond with instructions to stay out of railroad yards.

George Rodman, a Washington man, who had been in court before, was given a $25 fine or 25 days in jail.

German Court Bars Hearing Garfield Hays

U. S. Attorney Attempts to Deny He Attacked Fire Trial.

Leipzig, Germany, Oct. 5 (AP). Arthur Garfield Hays, American attorney, was refused permission today to defend himself after broadsides had been levelled against him and other members of what was termed the "scandal mongering" inquiry at London into the Reichstag fire, for which five men are on trial here.

The Hays incident hinged upon a reputed interview with the Paris correspondent of the Russian newspaper, Pravda, in which he was quoted as saying:

"The defense counsel in the Leipzig trial ought to seek to establish who the really guilty are and not only to unburden their defendants."

"No Reason to Hear Hays."

The interview was cited by Alfons Sack, defense attorney.

The court held a brief conference which resulted in the announcement that there was "no reason to hear Hays."

Hayes was ready, however, Sack added, to deny the truth of the interview. The court did not reply, but Attorney Seiffert, appointed to defend Miranus van der Lube, one of the five accused, broke in with: "It is my opinion that the committee was designed for political machinations against Germany."

Findings Flayed.

Sack previously had flayed the findings of the London commission as "this slanderous campaign against German justice."

(The findings of the unofficial London group said there were grave grounds for suspecting the Reichstag blaze was set by, or on behalf of, leading personalities in the Nazi party.)

Florida Coast Assured Storm Peril Has Passed

The U. S. Weather Bureau announced last night no gale was expected on the Florida coast and ordered storm warnings taken down from Titusville to Key West, Fla., and from Key West to Boca Grande.

League Bureau Is Proposed as Refugee Aid

Protection Would Cover All Jews and Others Needing Help.

Geneva, Oct. 5 (AP).—A subcommittee of the League of Nations assembly today approved a recommendation that the council of the league organize a bureau to deal with the problem of Jewish refugees from Germany.

The order would include within its scope Jews not German citizens and all other refugees.

The cost will be met temporarily by the league, with the hope the expenditures will be refunded by private organizations and governments of countries where Jews have taken refuge.

Asks Justice for All.

Victor Henry Berenger, French delegate, submitted a resolution seeking to require all States to extend "justice and tolerance" to racial, religious and linguistic minorities. The resolution will come up tomorrow.

M. Berenger held that the minorities treaties should cover all citizens without distinction. He maintained it is "impossible not to accord to the Jewish minority the feeling of human solidarity which is rightly claimed for other minorities."

A league delegate of Germany, which has signed no minorities treaties, except one with Poland affecting German Upper Silesia, has maintained the minorities question and the Jewish problem should not be mixed, since the Jews never have asked to be considered a minority.

Urges Juridical Protection.

A Greek delegate expressed the opinion the best solution would be preparation by the league council of a "general convention acceptable to all civilized people." He said he thought it unnecessary to divide populations into majorities and minorities, but it was necessary to evolve a system "recognizing the rights of man for all and substituting juridical for political protection."

The subcommittee discussing the Netherlands proposal to aid Jewish refugees from Germany, recommended that the league interrogate the countries receiving these refugees as to what they would contribute to financial help.

(Trade-mark Applied For)

By Morgan Baker

CHEERED by enthusiastic pledges of support at the American Federation of Labor convention, E. Claude Babcock, president of the American Federation of Government Employes, yesterday viewed with growing satisfaction progress his organization is making toward improving status of Federal workers.

BAKER.

"We must spare none of those who would destroy honest employes to make a Roman holiday," Mr. Babcock declared. "We must seek, a fair deal for Federal workers, not only with the voice of right, but with that of might and the weight of numbers.

"The approaching months are most important. Each member of the A. F. G. E. is resolved to spare no sacrifice to obtain justice for Government employes. We must have fair wages, honorable working conditions atnd decent and stable future prosperity," the militant federation leader continued.

He renewed an appeal to all Federal employes to join the A. F. G. E., pointing out the best and quickest results can be obtained through organized effort.

The fall and winter program of the federation has been expanded, Mr. Babcock stated.

"It is a comprehensive one," he said. "Every problem confronting the Federal employe, particularly those in Washington, is included in the schedule."

Delinquent Tax Deadline Today At Alexandria

City Council Fixes Oct. 26 as Sale Date on Property.

THE WASHINGTON POST BUREAU.
907 Prince St., Alexandria, Va.
Phone Alexandria 323.

Delinquent city real estate taxes for 1930 and 1931 must be paid by the close of business today, according to Purvis Taylor, city collector of Alexandria, to avoid publication of names October 16. The city council has set October 26 for a sale of property on which taxes are delinquent.

A mass meeting of property owners has been called for Tuesday night in the Elks Home to discuss problems confronting property owners.

It was reported at a meeting of the council that delinquent property taxes approximated $183,000, including 1933 taxes. It was first proposed to publish names of delinquents, including the 1933 amounts, but this was changed. Property sold will be bid in by the city, and the owner can redeem it within two years by payment of the taxes and the cost of advertising and sale.

Military Teacher Named.

Peter P. Liwski, of the faculty of the Alexandria High School, has been appointed professor of military science and tactics, his appointment having been approved by the Third Corps Area headquarters at Baltimore.

The school board has approved a "tag day" sale by high school students for the benefit of their athletic fund.

Miss Dolly Callahan has been elected a teacher in the high school.

Court Order Hit In Auto Arrests

Mt. Rainier Officials File Demurrer in Case.

Demurrer to the order requiring the mayor and town council of Mount Rainier, to show on what authority certain traffic arrests were being made, was filed yesterday in the Circuit Court of Prince Georges County. The officials contended they were not proper defendants in the case. No date was set for the hearing.

Court action against alleged unwarranted arrests was instituted by the American Automobile Association, the test case being based on the arrest of Miss Emily G. Smith, 1438 Meridian place northwest, on September 10.

It was charged that the authorities were exceedingly vigilant in enforcing traffic regulations because of fees involved.

Arthur Coleman, colored, of Hyattsville, Md., was given four months in the House of Correction for carrying a concealed weapon. A charge of disorderly conduct was dismissed.

Murray L. Ball, of Landover, Md., charged with violation of the milk bottle law by the Washington Milk Bottle Exchange, received a suspended sentence.

Jesse E. Weaver, of Berwyn, Md., was fined $50 and costs for assault on his wife. Harvey Furgeson, of Woodyard, Md., was fined $25 and costs for drunkenness and disorderly conduct. Rodney Shull, of Washington, was fined $50 for driving under the influence of intoxicating liquor. He pleaded guilty.

Fairfax School Building Plans Given Approval

Program Includes Grant of $43,500 From U. S. and $101,500 Loan.

School Board of Fairfax County yesterday approved revised plans for a county school building program prepared by Superintendent W. T. Woodson, calling for a grant of $43,500 from the Federal public works fund and borrowing $101,500 from the State literary fund.

The literary loan would be secured by bonds repayable within 15 years. This would be done by a general county building levy of about 20 cents on the $100 assessed property valuation. The levy would decrease as the annual bonds are repaid.

Building projects include a new high school building at Fairfax, $70,000; new building at Lorton, $35,000; addition at Centerville, $20,000; addition at Franconia, $10,000, and improvements at Clifton, $10,000. The Groveton School, under construction and included in the original plans, was dropped as it was impossible to obtain Federal funds for the project.

Application for the grant will be filed with Federal authorities immediately.

Superintendent Woodson is studying building needs for schools within the next five years at request of State school officers. The data is to be forwarded to Federal authorities. The survey will be completed next week and the school board will meet October 16 to consider the result.

Montgomery Fights Typhoid Outlook

Four cases of typhoid fever in a colored family at Sugerland, near Barnesville, Md., have impelled the Montgomery County Health Department to make a special effort to prevent recurrence in that vicinity. This was revealed in the monthly report of Dr. V. L. Ellicott, health officer.

The department also is taking precautions to have communicable disease cases on farms shipping milk to Washington reported at once. The ill persons are removed and milk handled only by persons who have not been exposed to the disease. Two such cases occurred in September.

Dr. Ellicott is to represent Montgomery County at the annual meeting of the American Public Health Association at Indianapolis October 9 to 12.

Finance Group Of League Hits Nationalism

Geneva Commission Says Economic Barriers Must Be Broken.

Geneva, Oct. 5 (AP).—There can be no lasting improvement in the world's economic situation, the economic and financial commission of the League of Nations Assembly reported today, unless the countries are prepared to abandon "the system of closed national economies."

The report, which held conditions are improved over last year, urged a solution of the currency stabilization question so the World Economic Conference might reconvene with hopes of success.

These closed systems of national economy were described as tending to become more general and threatening to stifle international trade.

rUges Collaboration.

The report added that it was most important to attempt to promote better international collaboration in the economic and financial spheres.

"It should be emphasized," the document continued, "that, although the immediate practical results of the World Economic Conference are not in proportion to the expectations which were entertained, it accomplished important work, the value of which will appear in the future."

The report insisted it was unfair to say the world parley abandoned its attempts to abolish the restrictions on international trade.

"It should rather be said the efforts to attack and thoroughly investigate these problems had to be suspended," it was said, with the explanation that the tariff truce to which 61 states had adhered is still in force despite some denunciations.

Happy Augury.

"The truce affords a happy augury of the outcome of the future discussions of commercial policy," the report said.

Concerning quotas and customs duties, the report said all delegations at the economic conference were agreed in principle on the abolition of quantity restrictions and the necessity of the reduction of excessively high tariffs.

On the question of the most-favored-nation clause the document said: "The last part of the proposals submitted toward the end of the conference by the American delegation has assumed considerable importance."

It stressed work of the subcommittee on "the coordination of the production and sale of certain important products had assumed an importance which exceeded all expectations."

Urges Stable Money.

Interpreting the resolutions adopted at the London parley, the report set out the chief object as affirming:

First, that it is in the interest of all to secure the stability of the international monetary field;

Second, that gold should be reestablished as the national measure for exchange values, "the time and parity being for each country to determine";

Third, that it is undesirable to put gold coins and gold certificates into international circulation; and Fourth, that a greater elasticity should be given to the Central Bank legal reserves provisions.

Radio Waves and Ripples

Rosemary Lane (right) just 17, sings for Fred Waring and the Columbia network Friday nights. S. P. B. Mais, of the British Broadcasting Corporation, in front of the Cosmos Club, about to set out on an expedition to look up American oddities for U. S. and the British Empire.

COLUMBIA set a date for Admiral Byrd's farewell broadcast yesterday.

The admiral, arrayed on both sides by Government officials and scientists, will airwave goodby for all C. B. S. stations from Norfolk's WTAR Sunday, October 15, from 8 to 9 p. m.

It will be the final Byrd aircast until the Antarctic expedition leaves its last South American port.

Whitecaps.

WOL—Eight O'Clock Revue, 8 p. m.; Modern Arabian Nights, 9:30 p. m.; Out of the East, 10:30 p. m. WJSV—Phil Spitalny, 8:30 p. m.; WJSV Players, 10:30 p. m.; Isham Jones, 11:30 p. m. WRC—Cities Service Concert, 8 p. m.; Lum and Abner, 10:30 p. m.; Mark Fisher's Orchestra, 11:30 p. m. WMAL—Irene Rich, 7:45 p. m.; Floyd Gibbons, 10:45 p. m.; Cotton Club Orchestra, 12:01 a. m.

WMAL's doing its bit to solve the unemployment problem among the radio hillbillies.

A Hyattsville team, auditioned with 16 other billbilly performers the other night, got a job yesterday for four weeks, starting tonight.

They are A. E. Alderman, chief hillbilly; Winter Marshall, Robert Baker, Blugie Lennox, Romy Devers and Fran Trappe.

Chief Hillbilly Alderman's talents include the occasional playing of a musical saw. The rest of the time he's a violinist, like Marshall. Baker and Lennox are banjo men, Devers handles a guitar and Fran Trappe will be remembered by WOL listeners—especially by those who were hanging around the loudspeaker the night of the A. B. S. inaugural—as an accordionist.

Unless called away suddenly by another revolution, Cuba's President Grau San Martin will speak in an N. B. C. broadcast from Havana tomorrow night.

President Grau is expected to be heard briefly from his office at about 8:26. Other speakers have been announced as Col. Fulgencio Batista, army chief of staff; Ruben Leon y Garcia, student directorate representative, and Winston W. Ehrgott, American-born Grau aid.

The playing of Cuban patriotic airs will take up most of 45 minutes of broadcasting, due to start at 8.

Waves.

Wayne King, orchestra man for N. B. C. three times a week, yesterday had his name on a Columbia coast-to-coast contract to open a new series of Lady Esther broadcastings Monday at 10 p. m. Thus did King become the second bandman currently radioing commercial programs for the senior networks.

Columbia says Baseball Radioer Fred Hooey's popularity with his New England listeners is anything but hooey. It points with pride to the fact the papers along the Yankee chain headlined the cold that forced the announcer off the air during a world series broadcast, nearly ignoring, in the early editions, Mel Ott's home run.

Privately, C. B. S. people here confess the Hooey attraction a little hard to understand.

Chief WJSV Engineer Les Bowman has been instructed by the New York office to be very careful about microphoning series noises. Several times during the New York games the crowd's cheering completely submerged the announcers.

One Washington listener made up her mind she wouldn't do anything about the Children's Hospital money, she wrote Assistant to the Superintendent Mrs. John Tabb, until she heard the babies crying.

Then she sat down, wrote a check for $25—and the letter.

Curtis Candy means to tell what it's doing about the NRA via Columbia and WJSV, starting tonight.

Former Assistant Secretary of War F. Trubee Davison, president of the American Natural History Museum, will tell Roy Chapman Andrews about that African hunting trip in front of an N. B. C. microphone Friday, October 20.

The Davisons return to this country next week.

Graham McNamee recovered sufficiently from an attack of ptomaine poisoning yesterday to handle the opening and close of the world series for N. B. C. For two days the sickness kept him away from the first series in his broadcast experience.

Josephine Gibson returns to the air for N. B. C. with advice to young housewives Monday morning. Miss Gibson is a veteran radio adviser, also home economics director for a pickle company. Some there are who would be surprised to learn she's still under 30.

Ripples.

Two Dixie boys won Columbia's announcer contest . . . Davison Taylor and Bert Parks . . . Louisville and Atlanta . . . but neither has an accent . . . George Lyons, harpist, and the Three X Sisters are Lum and Abner guests tonight . . . N. B. C., 10:30 . . . Beethoven musical biography continues Tuesday night . . . Helen Morgan cried from mike fright at her radio debut.

Automobile Injury Fatal.

Clarksburg, W. Va., Oct. 5 (Spl.). Injuries received when struck by an automobile while walking in the Fairmont-Grafton highway have resulted in the death of C. J. Sattes, 52, of Hammond. His skull was fractured.

Kelly and Wife FaceKidnaping Trial Monday

Techincal Barriers Swept as Federal Judge Speeds Case.

Oklahoma City, Oct. 5 (AP).—George F. Barnes, jr., alias George "Machine Gun" Kelly, and his wife, Kathryn Kelly, will go on trial in Federal Court Monday on charges of complicity in the plot to kidnap Charles F. Urschel, Oklahoma City oil millionaire.

Ripping aside technical barriers, Judge Edgar S. Vaught heard the couple's attorneys enter pleas of not guilty at their arraignment today.

Kelly's attorney, James H. Mathers, who represented Harvey Bailey, one of the seven convicted for the abduction last week, asked for a 24-hour delay before entering a plea. His request was denied.

John Roberts, Enid attorney who represented Mrs. Kelly, told the court he had little time to talk with his client, and asked more time to file demurrers and a motion for a change of venue.

"We'll consider the demurrers overruled and exceptions allowed," Judge Vaught said. He denied a change of venue as well.

Judge Vaught's quick action laid the Urschel kidnaping case before the court for the second time in two weeks.

Assisting United States District Attorney Herbert K. Hyde in the second trial again will be Joseph B. Keenan, Assistant United States Attorney General; D. E. Hodges, Assistant District Attorney, and W. C. Lewis, Special Assistant Attorney General.

Secrecy surrounded the arraignment. The couple was whisked from the jail in a police "wagon" escorted by several cars filled with officers. Kelly was shackled and handcuffed.

Berlin, Oct. 5 (AP).—The Prussian minister of education today issued orders to change the name of the Mendelssohn room in the Prussian state library to the master hall of the musical department. The famous composer's music is no longer played nationally.

On October 2 a grandson of Mendelssohn, Prof. Albrecht Mendelssohn Bartholdy, was dismissed from the University of Hamburg and from the Institute of Foreign Affairs, of which he was head, because of his Jewish nationality.

He was famous in international law.

Heavy Industries Lag.

A number of interesting studies have been made recently of the trends in industries producing capital goods as contrasted to industries turning out goods ready for consumption. Depression affects these two types of industry quite differently, being, in most cases, much more severe on the producers of capital goods. Conditions under which recovery may be expected also vary as between these two classes of manufacturing. The trend of each, therefore, has become highly significant in the formulation of recovery plans.

If capital goods, including automobiles and all kinds of buildings, and producers' goods, such as machinery and tools, are put into one category, and consumers' goods (food, clothing, gasoline, &c.) into another, the output of the two groups will be found to have been of about equal value in 1929. In 1931 the capital goods group represented only about 40 per cent of the national output. Last year the contraction of activity in this field was even more severe.

Ships were the only item in a list of 34 important capital goods to show an increased output in 1932 as compared with 1929. The output of all other capital goods declined by from 33 per cent for oil wells to 99 per cent for freight cars. Factory construction fell off 92 per cent; commercial building, 87 per cent; steel rail production, 85 per cent. Employment in this field, according to a study made by the National Industrial Conference Board, declined last March to 32 per cent of the average level for 1929. Pay rolls fell to only 18 per cent of the 1929 average.

For industries turning out consumers' goods the record is more encouraging. The consumption of sheep and lambs in 1932 increased 17 per cent over the 1929 level. Cheese, tea and coffee also were in greater demand last year, and no change was shown in the consumption of milk. Gasoline consumption fell off but 0.2 per cent. Out of 34 important items in the list of consumers' goods only 8 declined as much as 30 per cent.

Employment in industries manufacturing consumers' goods shows a similar trend. At the low point in March the number of workers in plants of this kind had declined 30 per cent from the 1929 level and pay rolls had fallen about 50 per cent.

During recent months recovery has been more rapid in the group of industries making capital goods, according to the analysis of the Industrial Conference Board, than in the factories producing for immediate consumption. In a representative group of capital goods industries employment gained 29 per cent between March and August and pay rolls 44 per cent, while in consumers' goods industries employment advanced 17 per cent and pay rolls 26 per cent. Activity in the heavy industries was at such a low ebb last spring, however, that this percentage increase becomes less impressive when converted into volume. The production of capital goods still lags far behind the output of commodities that are bought over store counters.

The importance of reviving the heavy industries, which can forge ahead steadily only when confidence in the future business trend has been established, can hardly be overemphasized.

Commerce With Argentina.

The United States has a vital interest in the trade agreement between Great Britain and Argentina which has just been signed at Buenos Aires. A number of tariff reductions which the Argentine has granted on British products also may apply to goods from the United States under the most-favored-nation agreements. The treaty involves goods in which the British are especially interested, but in view of the fact that Britain and the United States are competitors for the Argentine market, it may also provide an opening for some exporters in this country.

Substantial reductions were made in the duties on textiles, woolen goods, linen, automobiles, metals, machinery, pottery and glassware. The lower tariffs on automobiles and machinery should be of special benefit to this country. Great Britain seems to be well pleased with the agreement, however. It may be that Britain is relying more upon her preferential rights under the treaty with respect to foreign exchange than upon the tariff reductions.

Negotiations will begin next week for a reciprocal trade agreement between the United States and Argentina. But it is well to recognize that this country is not able to make such alluring offers as Great Britain has made. Argentine cattlemen have been assured of a market in England for a considerable portion of their meat. The United States raises meat of its own. Agricultural products move from Argentina to British ports in exchange for manufactured goods. There are indications that manufactures from the United States are preferred, but this country is not in the market for Argentina's farm products.

The United States succeeded in taking first place in Argentine trade in 1925, but that place was lost to Great Britain two years ago. Argentina is still a good customer for United States manufactured goods. The value of her purchases here in 1932 was twice the value of her exports to us. In this respect Argentina is an exception to the rule for South American countries. Most of these republics have large favorable balances in their trade with the United States.

Brazil draws 25 per cent of her imports from the United States; Chile, 34 per cent; Colombia, 40 per cent; Cuba, 57 per cent, and Mexico, 67 per cent. Likewise these states send a large volume of their exports to this country and for the most part such exports are non-competitive. They may prove to be a more fruitful field for extension of trade than is Argentina.

The Giants Outplayed.

Baseball tells a different story for the Nationals when the President looks on, when Whitehill is in the box, when he handles an American League ball, and when the Nationals' batters regain their blue eagle eyes. The story is a blank for the Giants—the first blank of the series, and a powerful agency in readjusting the betting on the outcome.

Whitehill held the visitors to five hits, a remarkable showing for a world series game. It was similar skill by Hubbell and Schumacher which defeated the Nationals in New York. Fitzsimmons granted nine hits in seven innings.

The Nationals were in fine batting form. Myer, Schulte, Goslin and Bluege were credited with doubles. One of Myers' doubles brought in two runs. The Giants could do nothing with Whitehill. He struck out Ott twice—Ott, whose homer in the first game was heard round the world. The Nationals were keen in base-running, particularly Schulte, who stretched an ordinary single into a brilliant double.

The finest piece of fielding in many a day was the backhand stop of Kuhel's hot grounder by Second Baseman Critz, who got the ball to Ryan in time to force out Cronin at second.

Summed up, the Nationals topped the Giants yesterday in both pitching and hitting.

Two more games are to be played here. If the Giants win both games the series will be over. Otherwise, at least one game will be played in New York next week. On yesterday's showing the Nationals should take both games here, in which case they would go to New York with an enormous advantage. But the contests today and tomorrow probably will be determined by the quality of pitching. There is still Pitcher Hubbell of the Giants to contend with, but if Cronin can bring forth the equal of Whitehill, or nearly so, there is little to worry over, for the Nationals seem to have regained their batting skill.

The Cult of Leisure.

The movement to bring about a progressive reduction in working hours as a means of raising the living standards of workers and spreading employment is one of the numerous paradoxical developments of a new economic era which appears to identify prosperity with scarcity. A belief in the value of scarcity permeates every phase of the recovery program which calls for systematic reduction of the output of fields, farms and factories as a means to increased well-being. Hence, it is not surprising to find spokesmen for organized labor urging general adoption of a thirty-hour working week for the purpose of distributing employment more widely and bestowing upon workers the blessings of leisure.

The Philistine who ventures to express doubt as to the possibility of attaining prosperity for an entire country by educating its working population to do less and less work is an unpopular man, but his questionings can not be ignored. What is euphemistically called "organization for leisure" may be admirable within reasonable limits, but there is a point beyond which a country can not afford to substitute a cult of leisure for the old-fashioned belief in the blessings of hard work.

Undoubtedly our material equipment and our natural resources ought to enable us to dispense with the sweat-shop and to shorten working hours within moderation. Present day systematic attempts to effect drastic reductions in the length of the working day, however, are based on the belief that there is not enough work to go around even in normal times; hence labor must be spread thinly over a larger area.

This theory certainly is openly indorsed by the head of the American Federation of Labor, and it is implied in the remarks of Secretary Perkins, who told the Federation convention that "we can not have the purchasing power necessary to balance our production capacity unless we develop opportunities for work and wages, stabilize the employment of wage earners and create opportunities for leisure." By thus linking more leisure with increased purchasing power for labor, Secretary Perkins says, in effect, that the less a man does, the more he should be able to earn.

It is of course possible for a strongly organized group of people—whether employers or employes—to restrict their output, and if they can control the terms on which they sell their goods or services, they may profit at the expense of the rest of the community by giving less and demanding as much or more than before in exchange. When this principle of restriction is employed by an entire nation, however, the assumption that everybody benefits from doing less ceases to be tenable.

To be sure, overproduction exists in many lines of activity in the sense that production is excessive in relation to the amounts that can presently be sold profitably. Restrictions upon the output of such goods may be highly desirable, pending permanent readjustments. It may even be necessary to spread work by reducing hours of labor until such time as the people dependent upon the overextended industries can be shifted to other employment. In such cases, a shortening of the work week may provide a provisional solution for a pressing unemployment problem. Emergency restrictions of this sort do not, however, afford permanent remedies for the productive maladjustments that lead to crises and necessitate a reallocation of labor and capital to bring about a better balance of production and consumption.

Another false assumption underlying the present day cult of scarcity is the belief that the country has exhausted its opportunities for profitable development of its capital resources. Hence, it is said, we should work fewer hours and utilize our labor-saving devices more fully, instead of striking out along new lines. The means by which we are to achieve the higher standards of living that are supposed to accompany the increase of leisure in this stagnant community of the future are not specified.

Those who still believe in a future which holds out prospects of constant change and progress will be inclined to repudiate any system of economic philosophy which leads to the conclusion that the only way to eliminate unemployment is to cut the working day of able-bodied men to the disappearing point.

Science Studies Marriage.

The tough old institution of marriage is now under scrutiny by a "scientific research committee" of the University of Chicago. This committee intends to find out how to make marriages happy, which means, of course, that it hopes to abolish unhappiness and divorce. It is well that "science" is to tackle this problem, since poor humanity has gone from bad to worse in trying to solve it. If a brain trust can find a scientific formula insuring happiness in marriage the world will gladly turn over all its other problems to brain trusts.

The committee has barely scratched the enormous field of its endeavors, but it has already reached several interesting conclusions after examining replies to 526 questionnaires. One conclusion is that the longer a courtship lasts, up to one year, the better are the chances for permanent married bliss. For every three months of curtailed courtship the chances of happiness diminish by 30 per cent.

Thus, apparently, instantaneous marriage at sight means that the couple are under a handicap of 20 less than zero so far as chances of happiness are concerned. Their marriage is moving toward the rocks as the parson ties the knot. Love at first sight, if it provokes marriage, is a disastrous blight, according to these findings. So the great lovers of classic romance, whose yearnings were thwarted by fate or man, were really fortunate. Shakespeare might have revised Romeo and Juliet if he had possessed the scientific information accumulated at Chicago. He might have had his young people die happy in the thought that they were escaping a lifetime of wedded misery.

The committee seems to fix upon one year as the limit of fortunate courtship. If a pair should remain engaged longer than a twelvemonth it may be presumed that their romance would turn sour. They must seize the psychological moment to clinch their happiness—not too soon, not too late, but exactly at the end of their year of troth.

What matters it that the Reno courts could show thousands of blasted marriages which occurred at the end of a year of courtship? These are exceptions, which have no effect upon the scientific law of averages. Let it be borne in mind that science takes no account of trifles. When science concludes that wedded bliss is subject to an actuarial expectation of life, based upon the percentage of courtship, it is well for lovers to take heed. Let them clock their meetings, and time their ecstasy and keep books on the percentage of their woo-ings.

The skill of baseball is subject to psychological eccentricities which make it a delightful game of chance.

When everybody is on the leisure schedule, machines will be operated by robots that manufacture themselves.

Sturdy Old Jokes.

From the Boston Transcript.

One of the artists who draw comic strips for the newspapers has come out with a confession that he sometimes feels low in his mind because the visible supply of ideas for fresh strips sometimes utterly disappears for days together. When these distressing periods of intellectual famine occur there is nothing to do but go back to London Punch or London Fun of the period of our Civil War and borrow from them some of the mid-Victorian humor which once evoked haw-haws even in Lambeth Palace.

Those of us who for our sins are obliged to glance over the day's grist of "funnies" are quick to note when the comic genius is in desperate straits for an original idea. Many a Spanish War veteran gives up his paper in disgust because in 1933 it pictures jokes that originated with Petroleum V. Nasby or Josh Billings or Lew Dockstader. Seventy-five years ago there wasn't the insatiable appetite for nonsense that there is today. A good joke went far and was remembered for a lifetime. That is why hoary-headed old gentlemen, looking at the newspaper funny pages and listening to some of the light entertainers of the radio broadcasts, find that the lean and slippered pantaloon of humor is trying to renew his youth and feed the public the witticisms of a day that is dead. Not two weeks ago a chance listener to a radio buffoon heard him make use, in slightly refurbished form, of a jest that had appeared in the Buffalo Gazette about the time that the town was burnt by the British in 1813. Even then it was apparently a joke that had gone the rounds. It may have been new with Chaucer. It must have an English origin, for it won't work in any other language, but the curious thing is that it is still serviceable after long generations of wear and tear by English and American humorists.

Just Folks.

Mammon.

Strange God am I,
The yellow god of gold!
Whose worshipers must die
And leave the joys they hold;
I pledge no hope to men
By which their strength may live.
Helpless I leave them when They lose the gain I give.

Who lends his faith to me
To beauty oft grows blind.
Nothing but gold he'll see
Before him or behind;
Friends will his hearth depart,
About him will hatreds heap,
Let me but win his heart
No lasting joy he'll keep.

Mine is a curious power:
I merely sell and buy;
I bring to bloom no flower.
A strange, cold god am I.
Who follows me must miss
All that can long endure,
I promise earthly bliss,
But even that's not sure.

Daily Talks About Books and Authors

Franklin's Autobiography.

Franklin never professed to be a literary man; he was a scientist, a statesman and a man of action. But he wrote one of the most universally popular of all books, and he did something more, he made the most ephemeral of publications permanent; he gave immortality to an almanac!

He died in 1790. The first edition of the autobiography appeared in 1791 in Paris, and in the French language; some rascally publisher must have got hold of the manuscript. In 1793 two English versions appeared in England, but they were both translations from the French. It was not until 1817 that the book supposedly as written by Franklin, appeared under the editorship of his grandson. This man made over 1,200 changes in the text, as he thought he could improve the style of his grandfather. It is important to remember this fact, as the majority of editions now circulating are from this corrupt and emasculated text. It was not until 1868 that the book appeared printed accurately and completely from the original manuscript. We owe this to John Bigelow. Hence, whenever reading this book, be sure you get Bigelow's edition. All others are imperfect.

No man of genius ever had more charm than Franklin; one reason why his autobiography has such compelling fascination. We share the conversation with the most interesting American who ever lived.

The Burglar Can't Right Matters by Leaving a Worthless Promise to Repay

By Robert Quillen.

Today I met a young man who seemed to possess all of the qualities that are admirable. He was modest, well-mannered, frank and manly, and despite handicaps had worked his way up to a place of trust and authority.

Later I mentioned his good qualities to an intimate friend who knew him well, and the friend replied: "Yes, he's a fine fellow in many ways, but he won't pay his debts."

In times like these, one must make careful distinction between won't and can't. Many of the finest people are unable to pay what they owe. But others less fine take advantage of conditions to evade debts they could easily pay.

The moral status of one who can pay and won't has never been adequately defined, but he enjoys an advantage similar to that of the thief.

Suppose you drive into a filling station and tell the operator to fill your gas tank. The moment he has replaced the cap you start your motor and dash away. In that case you are a thief.

The fact that you ordered the gasoline gave the operator reason to believe that you would pay. He therefore trusted you. Instead of demanding his pay in advance, he waited until the tank was filled.

But suppose you do not drive hastily away, but tell the man to send you a bill on the first of the month. Again you give him reason to believe that you will pay. Again he trusts you.

If then you do not pay at the appointed time, or ever thereafter, have you not defrauded him as certainly as though you had dashed away without a word?

If it is dishonest to seize a man's goods, is it more honest to let him wait 30 days to discover his loss?

To have goods charged is to say in effect: "I will pay for these when a bill is presented." That is universal custom, universally understood. It is a tacit contract.

If there is no intention to pay, the goods are obtained by false pretense and fraud. It is not classed as a crime, but a wrong must be measured by its effects.

If in the end one man has obtained goods without payment and the other is deprived of his goods without remuneration, wherein does the transaction differ from thieving?

We trick ourselves by coining unfaithful definitions. The horsethief was no less a horsethief if he merely walked off with a halter to which a horse was attached.

Currency Stabilization Next?
Topeka Capital.

Currency stabilization is believed in Washington to be the next move of the administration in its broad recovery program, which is not dependent wholly on the national recovery act. President Roosevelt by this time is known to have no sympathy with inflation in its mere monetary sense. Greenbacks and free silver make no appeal to his mind. Credit inflation the administration has practiced and will develop further.

Unique Political Action.
St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

Since it is a foregone conclusion that more than the required 36 States will have voted for repeal by November 8, the twenty-first amendment will be the most speedily approved of all amendments appended to the Constitution. In the second place, this will be the first instance of the removal of an earlier amendment. Third, it will be the first time an amendment has been ratified by use of conventions rather than by the various Legislatures. Thus it is that the repeal amendment will take its place not only as the amendment on which the Nation spoke its mind most promptly, but also as the first on which the people directly passed judgment.

They Kept the Sows.
Houston Post.

The fly in the ointment of pork price raising through sow and pig slaughtering is that farmers refused to part with their sows. With the source of hog population still only slightly impaired, the probability of a swine shortage next year, with consequent higher prices, is not great. No great success for the Wallace hog-killing plan is claimed by any one, as yet.

As far as it applied to the country as a whole, the theory of the plan was good. The only trouble was, it didn't work out in practice.

She is busy in Canada, where the rain is holding off, and in Argentina, where the rust is doing very nicely, thank you.

Along the Potomac

With Carlisle Bargeron

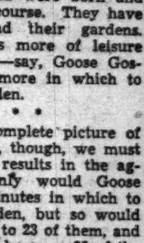
TO THE Democrats who saw yesterday's game between what we wittingly call the Nats and the Giants there must have opened a boundless field for experimenting. Here is something that is fundamentally the same as it was when it began. There have been changes in the rules, but nothing affecting the basic purposes which are to get a man on base either by a hit, a walk or some other event untoward to the opposing team, and then gradually to advance this man around to where he started from.



Bargeron.

It was this way under the Republicans, and if it survives the present regime without revision it will be the only thing that does.

• • • •

WHY, it is a perfect setup for the experimenters. No one of them could have failed to be impressed, in the first instance, at the utter waste. Why, for example, should time be set aside for the opposing teams to warm up? What they do in this time, whether they miss a ball or throw it over the fence, does not count in the final result. It is idle to say that if the players are not given an opportunity to warm up they will not enter the game in form. Some of them do not do so anyway. And certainly the two teams would enter on an equal basis. A fair practice code could make sure of that.

Now, if they did not have this time for warming up, you can imagine what it would mean to the players in added leisure time. Take the Washington boys: They all have families and were born and reared here, of course. They have their homes and their gardens. Well, 15 minutes more of leisure time would give—say, Goose Goslin—15 minutes more in which to work in his garden.

• • • •

TO get the complete picture of these things, though, we must look at the results in the aggregate. Not only would Goose have 15 more minutes in which to work in his garden, but so would his colleagues, 22 to 23 of them, and then there would be some 25 of the Giants to have this same opportunity.

What one must do, of course, is to figure up all the baseball players there are, in the major and in the minor leagues, and multiply the number by 15, which would give one the aggregate leisure time or time to work in the garden on this one innovation.

One can not close his eyes, of course, to the squawk that probably would come from the A. A. A. because of this increased time for home gardening with its attendant increased gardening yield. But that could be worked out by the coordinating board which is supposed to attune the ambitions of the NRA to those of the A. A. A. It is only one of the possibilities for improvement in the national pastime that came to my eye.

• • • •

ANOTHER that comes readily to mind is that of increasing the size of the team to give employment to the unemployed ball players, of whom there must be legions about the country. Is there any particular reason why a team should be confined to nine players at a time?

One has only to take one look to see that there is all sorts of space on the playing field left ungarded. Why, the very fact that the Washington team made four runs yesterday shows this. Between first and second base there is only one man to take care of 90 feet. Yesterday's game showed that a batter hitting a ball sharply and on the nose can get a ball through that area. The same is true of the 90 feet between second and third base and between third base and home.

The unguarded space in the outfield is utterly appalling, or rather it is to the efficient, to the national planning mind.

• • • •

WHY should a man standing at the bat be permitted to score a triumph over his opponents simply because he hits a ball where there is no one? Answer me that, if you please. Yet, that is looked upon as success, mind you, when there is no one to get the ball. It is about as logical as if he carried the ball around in his pocket.

A real accomplishment would be, of course, to hit a ball right where a man is and then best him in the game of brawn and wit.

The criticism on this is not against the batter. Certainly not. He can't be expected to bring in some of his friends to cover the unguarded space. The fault is with the owner barons. They are so selfish they do not wish to employ enough men to guard those places. There is not the slightest doubt that if Clark Griffith wished to put out the money he could put so many men in the field and on the diamond it would be utterly impossible for the Giants to make a single run.

A matter that should have the attention of Mrs. Roosevelt is the apparent discrimination against women. Of the personnel of nine on each side in yesterday's game there was not a single woman. This is due, purely, to the narrow-mindedness, the old-fashionedness, of men.

BACK-YARD FARMING.

Prof. Richard P. Doherty, of Boston University's College of Business Administration, believes that part-time, or back-yard, farming is not only a temporary way to relieve unemployment, but that it may well become a fixture in our economic system. He regards it as fitting in with the shorter working week, says the Worcester Telegram, the decentralization of industry and the growing "industrial uselessness" of middle-aged workers.

U. S. Probes Retail Cotton Goods Mark-Up

Steps Taken to Determine Relation of Advance to Processing Tax.

A Nation-wide inquiry to find out how far large markups in the price of retail cotton goods are being attributed to the cotton processing tax, was launched yesterday by Agriculture Administrator George N. Peek.

If the inquiry warrants, a conference of retail store executives from various parts of the country will be called here to reach an understanding, he announced.

Meanwhile, the administrator already has called Washington retail store executives to meet with officials here next Wednesday. They will be asked to explain why local markups in retail cotton prices in some cases are attributed to the processing tax alone.

Reasons for Meeting.

Peek said he called the meeting "because of numerous complaints received by the Agriculture Adjustment Administration of increased retail cotton goods prices attributed solely to the precessing tax."

Invitations sent out by Peek to Washington store executives assured merchants this notice "should in no way be taken by you as an indication that your store is under suspicion of using unfair sales methods in respect to the processing tax.

"There are stores which are meticulously fair in regard to the tax," he wrote. "There are others whose sales clerks cite the tax as their only explanation for the increase in prices."

Seek to Trace Tax.

He said the A. A. A. is anxious to find out how the tax is passed on to the merchant, and what they do with it as to the consumer. He said he is making the same inquiry in other cities.

Investigators from the office of Dr. Frederic C. Howe, A.A.A. consumers' counsel, have shopped in several Washington stores in answer to complaints received by the administration.

In many instances they found sales clerks tell customers increases in the price of sheets, towels, hosiery and other cotton goods, is due solely to the tax, the administration announced.

Dr. Howe warned housewives the processing tax is only 4.2 cents per pound on the net weight of cotton going into manufactured commodities.

"The tax alone does not justify many of the increases of which we have complaints, and when customers are told by sales clerks that these mark-ups are due only to the processing tax they should question the assertion closely," Dr. Howe said.

Examples Are Cited.

"The amount of the tax on a sheet 81 by 99 inches, containing about 2 pounds of cotton and retailing at an average of $1.25 is, for example, just under 8 cents. Work shirts weighing nine-tenths of a pound and averaging 85 cents each warrant a tax of only 3½ cents; overalls of just over 2 pounds of cotton, averaging $1.42, have a tax of about 8½ cents, and on unbleached muslin averaging 13 cents a yard with a third of a pound of cotton, the tax should be about 1 cent."

Dr. Howe's investigators found some Washington stores had instructed sales clerks to be careful not to charge the price increases to the processing tax alone, and in such stores clerks spoke of both the tax and increased labor costs caused by NRA codes.

Georgia to Get $10,000,000

Highways Deadlock of Commission and Governor Ended.

A deadlock between Gov. Talmadge of Georgia and the Georgia Highway Commission, which has held up the Federal Government's allocation of $10,000,000 for new highways, was broken yesterday when the United States Bureau of Public Roads ruled that the commission not only was a "legal" one, but was also satisfactory.

Release of the funds will follow as rapidly as the projects can be approved by the Public Works Administration, according to Thomas H. MacDonald, director of the Bureau of Public Works.

Secretary of Interior Harold L. Ickes, public works administrator, said he would sign the authorization for the Georgia construction program if the Public Works Board approved it. The assignment of funds will call for expenditure of 50 per cent of the fund on Federal highways, 23 per cent on secondary roads and 27 per cent on Federal roads into and through municipalities.

Texas Oil Firms Win Ouster Fight

Court Holds Recovery Code Nullified 2-Year Suit.

Austin, Tex., Oct. 5 (AP).—District Judge J. D. Moore today sustained a general demurrer to the Ouster suit of Attorney General James V. Allred against 15 major oil companies, which charged violation of the anti-trust laws and asked penalties of $17,000,000 and forfeiture of the rights of the companies to do business in Texas.

The companies asserted Allred's suit, instituted two years ago, was nullified by provisions of the oil code adopted under the National Recovery Act and approved by President Roosevelt.

The attorney general asserted the companies had conspired to effect a monopoly in the marketing of refined petroleum products under an agreement aimed at elimination of independent competition.

Calm During Baseball Storms

Vital National News Has Become Conspicuous Through Absence

By William Harlan Hale.

I could not help noticing, at the Polo Grounds during the first two games of the world series, a general lack of that hoarse and turbulent excitement usual to sporting crowds. On the second day, when the attendance had dropped by almost a fourth, this decline of enthusiasm—except in a few rousing innings—was especially apparent.

Not that the thousands were bored or preoccupied; indeed, many of them must have gone home weak from the shouting. But the sensation of a somewhat lagging interest which I got, set me thinking about the strange hour in which these games were taking place. I remembered how the entire spotlight of newspaper publicity was being focused on these contests, to the exclusion of almost everything else.

I tried to recollect what sort of news stories had been excluded. Inflation, for instance? Rising farm prices? Settlement of the garment workers' strikes? More positive facts concerning re-employment? Figures on expanding bank loans to industry?

No, apparently none of these. They were not being mentioned. And then, suddenly, I realized that the world series was excluding no news at all from the front pages. There simply wasn't any to exclude.

It seemed a curious time to be going without news. The good old ship of state simile came to mind, with the impression that its course was now being shaped very close to broad shoals and troubled deeps. The moment imperatively called for new, precise commands. The horizon ahead seemed doubtful, with some observers regarding the heavy clouds of inflation there as an approaching hurricane, others as true heralds of deliverance.

How long, I thought, will the President continue giving gracious ear to the proponents of every conceivable form of monetary doctrine, without finally vouchsafing the world so much as one whisper of opinion? He must, at any rate, be getting a good seminar training in second-year economics. But his reaction to all the books and the figures remains as darkly obscure as the reaction of that silent student in the last row of the class, who always absents himself when a quiz is announced.

Does he not realize, I wondered, that in refusing to commit himself one way or the other about inflation he actually is helping to restore that doctrine of deflation which reached its exultant climax in the bank holiday of last March? If his sympathies are with the vast debtor interest in the country, he is offering it little encouragement. If his sympathies are with the creditors, the banks, the lenders, he is not giving them their sustaining bread of life—confidence.

And the result of it all is that a brilliant tournament of abuse continues between the frenzied knights of wide-open greenbackism and the tough condottieri of frightened bankers. No one wins; no one even achieves a compromise.

It has been one of the most enviable qualities of the President that he has tried always to sound out many varieties of opinion before going ahead to decide on a particular issue. The history of his career shows clearly that he has been addicted to no one body of theory, to no closed, definite philosophy of government and economics. He has been educated by change; and in this education, he has selected advisers whose whose sincerity and good faith, at any rate, no one can challenge.

In that he has set himself apart from several of his predecessors in both parties—men so confident of their own ability to decide everything that they wanted little advice, and when advisers were necessary, preferred yes-men.

But this very readiness to wait on the words of others may not be standing the President in good stead during these days. The quick and decisive measures of March 5, and after, had been prepared, to a large extent, in the several months respite granted to the President between election and inauguration. But there is less time now for deliberation; events are moving fast. To discuss, debate, temporize much longer on so immediate an issue as inflation may annul those very benefits which the advisers are so carefully projecting.

Perhaps it is all decided, and the great edict or proclamation lies locked in the top right-hand drawer. But it is not doing much good there, save as an implement of dramatic suspense.

And that is why, as I sat there in the Polo Grounds, during a series of rather inactive plays with the spectators so quiet at the great game, I got the distinct sensation of calm before the storm.

Ferry Action Expected Soon

$425,000 Is Sought From U. S. for Chesapeake Project.

Officials of the Washington Chamber of Commerce said yesterday that favorable action was expected within a few days on the application of the Chesapeake Beach Railway for a loan of $425,000 from the Public Works Administration to establish a new ferry service across the Chesapeake Bay from Chesapeake Beach to Hundson, Md.

Arguments in support of the application were made by Thomas P. Littlepage, president, and other officers of the chamber at the hearing before the review board of the Public Works Administration about two weeks. That board will make recommendations to the public works board for final disposition of the case.

Maryland interests, led by the Claiborne-Annapolis Ferry Co., have fought the new ferry proposal, contending it was not justified by public convenience and necessity.

Officials of the Chamber of Commerce contend the ferry will be of great value to the eastern shore of Maryland and will help Washington, as it will bring 200,000 people nearer to this city.

Long Promises Tax Cut for Louisiana

Declares New Program to Be Announced.

New Orleans, Oct. 5 (AP).—With members of the State Legislature threatening to convene themselves to effect tax reforms, Senator Huey P. Long today resumed his role as "Louisiana Kingfish" and issued statements in behalf of himself, Gov. O. K. Allen and the Louisiana Tax Reform Commission, saying a tax relief program had been worked out.

This program, he said, would be based on new taxes "on certain large corporate interests and special interests which heretofore have escaped taxation."

He said proceeds would be used to relieve small home owners and promised to disclose details in a band-wagon tour of the State."

Ohio River Packets Ordered Auctioned

Pittsburgh-Cincinnati Line Sale Authorized.

Pittsburgh, Oct. 4 (AP).—Federal Judge R. M. Gibson today authorized public sale of the property of the Ohio River Transportation Company.

The property includes a wharf boat, two packets, storage warehouses at Hockins Port, Ohio, and Reedsville, W. Va., a 12-ton hand crane and equipment.

The packets have been operating between Pittsburgh and Cincinnati.

Geologist Says Mine Fire Causes Mountain Slide.

Colorado's moving mountain was explained yesterday by John B. Reeside, National Museum geologist.

It is not a volcano, he explained, in spite of rumblings and smoke during the upheaval this week, which caused thousands of tons of rock to slide.

The wandering hill, Carbon Mountain, he said, is underlaid by a 20-foot vein of burning coal.

Everything above the coal bed has been dried and loosened by the heat. All that was needed to cause a slide was a heavy rainstorm, he said.

Low Mark Set In Forest Loss

Fire Damage This Year Drops 60 Per Cent Under 1932.

An all-time low in fire losses in the national forests this year is forecast by the Forest Service of the Department of Agriculture. A preliminary report issued yesterday shows a decrease of nearly 60 per cent in burned area, as compared with the same period last year.

Favorable weather conditions and the work of the C. C. C. were given by Roy Headley, assistant forester and chief of operations, as the principal causes for the decrease. Man-caused fires for 1933 up to September 20 number 2,951, as compared with 3,374 for the same period in 1932.

The area burned this year is 128,635 acres, compared to a five-year average of 600,873 acres per year. Cost of fire suppression in the national forests up to September 20 this year was $257,199, as compared with $706,112 for 1932, and $3,922,217 for 1931. Nearly half the acreage burned this year was in California.

The code was sponsored by the American Osteopathic Association.

Jenkins Denies Using Office For Ship Line

Senator Queries Him on Relationships While Serving U. S.

J. Caldwell Jenkins, formerly with the Shipping Board and the Emergency Fleet Corporation, now vice president of the Black Diamond Steamship lines, was called upon yesterday by the special Senate committee investigating ocean mail contracts to explain his connection with the steamship officials while he was still in the Government's service.

Senator Black (Democrat), Alabama, asked Jenkins if he had aided the steamship line in drafting a petition to be presented to the board for a change of the operating contract to a lump-sum arrangement.

"Absolutely not," declared Jenkins. "I was interested because I believed in this principle. I was interested in making the lump-sum contract apply to all operators of the Shipping Board, not to the Black Diamond alone."

"Friend" Refers to Two.

Chairman Black read correspondence of 1928-29 between J. E. Dockendorff, president of the Black Diamond, and V. J. Sudeman, secretary-treasurer, in which the advice and opinion of "our friend" was frequently mentioned.

Jenkins identified this friend as himself most of the time, although occasionally he said it referred to T. J. O'Connor, chairman of the Shipping Board.

Jenkins stated that a profit-sharing agreement had been given to the Mobile Oceanic Co., a matter "in which you, Mr. Senator, were interested."

"Ah, I was wondering when this would be brought up," countered the chairman. "Did I call you up and say that the little lines should be considered in this connection, although I stated that I was opposed to the subsidy?"

Letter Sought.

"Yes. But were interested in the mail contract. You wrote me to that effect."

"I should be very glad to have that letter, please," asked the senator.

Jenkins said he would attempt to find the letter.

Jenkins testified he receives $12,000 a year salary from the Black Diamond, in addition to $250 a month for Washington office expenses, and a traveling expense account. He identified a $1,000 check as given him for "Washington entertainment."

Jenkins will continue his evidence today.

Couzens Says O'Connor Never Hid Any Facts

Senator Couzens (Republican), Michigan, denied in a statement yesterday that J. F. T. O'Connor, Comptroller of the Currency, had concealed information when his name was before the Senate Finance Committee for approval, according to the Associated Press.

The denial was made by Couzens in commenting on news dispatches from Los Angeles describing a suit filed in superior court there to disbar O'Connor in California on the ground that he practiced law after his Federal appointment. The suit was dismissed.

7 Indicted at Boston In Failure of Banks

Boston, Oct. 5 (U.P.).—Seven former bank officers and employes were named in five additional indictments returned by the Federal grand jury here today in connection with the collapse of the Federal National Bank, of Boston, and its subsidiaries nearly two years ago.

The new indictments involved transactions totaling $660,000, making a total of $1,650,000 for which the Federal Government demands an accounting.

Second East St. Louis Explosion Victim Dies

East St. Louis, Ill., Oct. 5 (AP).—Howard Carner, 24, chemist, died today, the second victim of a gasoline vapor explosion in five 11,000-gallon tanks belonging to the Phillips Pipe Line Co.

Charles Barefoot, chemist, risked his life and lost when he climbed to the top of one of the tanks and shut off a valve, preventing spread of the flames. Company officials said he probably saved a number of lives by his action.

"Sleeping Sickness" Deaths Show Drop

St. Louis, Oct. 5 (AP).—In 72 hours, including yesterday, only four deaths from "sleeping sickness" were reported in the epidemic which health authorities have said is well under control.

Only three new cases were reported yesterday, compared with a daily average of as high as 30 when the epidemic was at its height.

Boston Attorney Cleared.

Boston, Oct. 5 (U.P.).—Disbarment proceedings against Lowell A. Mayberry, prominent Boston attorney, charged with jury-fixing were dismissed today by Justice Henry T. Lummus, of the State Supreme Court.

Simplicity and Warmth Rule Hospitality in White House

Refreshments, Out Since Wilson Regime, Return to Receptions.

Simplicity will be the keynote of the first Roosevelt official social season, Mrs. Roosevelt said at her press conference yesterday as she outlined her season's schedule.

The new note in entertainment will include an effort to make people feel at home and to see that they have a good time. Part of this program of hospitality will be the provision of refreshments at large official receptions. Not since the Wilson administration have Presidents given their reception guests anything but ice water.

The refreshments will not include rare, hot-house luxuries, said Mrs. Roosevelt, but fruit punch, cakes and simple sandwiches.

Mrs. Roosevelt said she and the President, after long conferences, decided to entertain this season as usual at the White House, despite the stress of the times.

"I feel very strongly that not to have such hospitality would be a mistake," said the President's wife. "In times like these I feel that one of the most helpful things is to see our friends."

There will be fewer guests at the State dinner parties and at the official receptions.

President and Mrs. Roosevelt will dine out only once during the season, at the Vice President's home. The President is far too busy, said his wife, to make the usual rounds of Cabinet dinners.

Child Health Workers Open Meeting Today

Nation-Wide Drive on Malnutrition Will Be Considered.

Since statistics show that 7,000,000 children in the United States are suffering from malnutrition, a Nation-wide remedial drive will be launched at the Child Health Recovery Conference opening here today.

Secretary of Labor Frances Perkins will open the conference in the Red Cross auditorium, Seventeenth and E streets northwest.

Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, wife of the President, has signified her intention of attending the conference.

Divided into four groups, about 100 authorities in various lines will be present. They represent organizations having more than 50,000,000 members. The groups are: Medical and health, educational, home economists and nutritionists, relief and social service and labor organizations.

Reports gathered by the Children's Bureau of the Labor Department show effects of the depression period, with millions of children having had merely enough food to keep alive.

It is believed the conference, after today's deliberations, will call for a Nation-wide clinic. One of the most important phases of the session will be the report of the executive committee. This report will be read by Dr. Julius Hess, of Chicago, representing the American Medical Association's section on diseases of children.

Dr. Walter Bierring, of Des Moines, Iowa, president-elect of the American Medical Association, will attend.

Dr. William Palmer Lucas, pediatrician of San Francisco, flew here to attend the conference.

All State health officers are expected to attend.

Firms to Get Federal Loans To Speed Jobs

Ickes Releases Public Works Funds in Wake of Labor Demands.

In an effort to speed reemployment, the Public Works Administration has decided to lend increasingly large amounts of its $3,300,000,000 fund to any private enterprises which can qualify.

The decision, it was learned last night, followed demands of American Federation of Labor leaders for speedier expenditures, coupled with Secretary Ickes' explanation that hesitancy of States and cities to use available funds was responsible for the lag.

Approximately half the original fund is yet to be disbursed. The Public Works Administration plans to allot this freely to private enterprises.

To qualify for loans, it was pointed out, private corporations must promise to spend the money immediately, most of it in wages. Furthermore, the projects must be self-liquidating. Many corporations, it was said, anticipated the decision and have requested loans.

It was indicated some of these applications may be acted upon within the next few weeks to permit rapid reemployment before winter.

The loans will be at a lower rate of interest than those granted by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and will be allowed longer periods of amortization up to 30 years.

33 Companies In Coast C. C. C. Ordered East

200 Men in Each Group Assigned for Winter to Third Corps Area.

Thirty-three additional companies of the Civilian Conservation Corps have been assigned to camp locations in the Third Corps Area for the winter period, Maj. Gen. Paul B. Malone, corps area commander, announced yesterday. Each company is composed of 200 men.

With exception of two companies, one from Virginia and another from Pennsylvania, all will be composed of young men enrolled from New Jersey, Delaware and New York. All the men coming into this area have been working in forests of the Rocky Mountain States.

Thirty-two units of 21 men of the C. C. C. were sent last June from this corps area to the Rocky Mountain area. Fort George G. Meade and Fort Monroe, Va., each sent 16 groups with one officer and four enlisted men of the Regular Army.

With this group, as a nucleus a large number of additional recruits were sent into the West as fast as the men could be conditioned and transported.

Later, plans were changed as sufficient camp sites were approved in the Pennsylvania, Maryland and Virginia sections. This required all locally enrolled men and the advance detachments in the West to be returned to their home area.

Of the new camp locations approved by the director of emergency conservation work, seven are in Pennsylvania and the remaining 26 in Virginia. New camps in Virginia will be at Yorktown, Fredericksburg, Williamsburg, Front Royal, Fort Union, Manassas, Fort Story, Marion, Passett, Staunton, Madison, Appomattox, Fort Hunt, Bedford and Skulls Gap.

Society Turns Out For World Series

President Tosses Out First Ball and Dignitaries Lay Aside Pomp as Capital Sees First Game.

"Meet me out to the ball game" has been the cry of Washington for the past several months, but when the cry went forth yesterday, everybody was there to see the "home team" play the New York Giants.

It was all very much like a spectacle outside an ancient Roman arena, where senator, statesmen and military men forgot their dignity in the scuffle to see a famous chariot race, or to watch a contest between the world's most famous gladiators.

No togas were torn yesterday, but many an overcoat was treated in an unruly manner as the crowd pressed forward, with a "root, root, root for the home team."

What a crowd! Even the ominous skies and heavy rainfall just before the game, could not dampen the spirits of that assemblage. And there was no mistaking which side it was rooting for. No foolishness about being polite to the visiting team.

Just before the game was called the bands stood at attention as the President's car was driven into the diamond and up to the Presidential box. Cheers greeted the Chief Executive as he seated himself with his party, waited for the bands to play the "Star-Spangled Banner," and then energetically tossed out the ball.

With the President yesterday were Mr. and Mrs. Stephen Early, Mr. Marvin H. McIntyre, Mr. Rudolph Forster, Miss Paula Tully, Lieut. Comdr. McIntyre, physician to the President; Capt. Walter N. Vernou, naval aid, and Lieut. Col. Edwin M. Watson, military aid.

Notably among those missing was the Ambassador of Spain, Senor Don Juan Francisco de Cardenas, who sailed yesterday for Europe. Senor de Cardenas is probably the greatest baseball fan among the diplomats, and has represented his country in the only three nations in the world where baseball is played: Japan, Cuba and the United States. The Ambassador has often likened the crowd at the games to those at a bull fight in San Sebastian; shouting, applauding, and even calling "take him out" as the Spaniards do when they want another bull.

A goodly gathering of smart women, as great fans as the men, added a note of color to the crowd. Smart women in tweeds and topcoats, smart women in furs and orchids, and women even smart in their raincoats.

Mrs. Evalyn Walsh McLean had with her in her box her son, Mr. Edward Beale McLean, jr., Mr. and Mrs. John F. Wilkins, Rear Admiral and Mrs. Emory S. Land and Mr. Monroe Lee. Mrs. McLean wore a handsome black coat trimmed with a large collar of silver fox, and a close fitting black hat.

Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Meyer entertained a party, including the Ambassador of Great Britain, Sir Ronald Lindsay; Sir Frederick Leith-Ross, Mr. Samuel G. Blythe, Mr. Frank Kent and Mr. Eugene MacLean. Mrs. Meyer wore a smart costume of brown tweed with a three-quarter length coat and a small brown hat.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Hogan, the latter in a navy blue ensemble and hat with a top coat of soft tan tweed trimmed with brown fur, were in a box and with them were Mr. and Mrs. Robert V. Fleming with their debutante daughter, Miss Alice Fleming. Mrs. Fleming wore a beige suit trimmed with beige fox and a black crepe blouse and small hat, while pretty Miss Fleming wore navy blue, her small hat having a perky red feather.

Nearby were Mr. and Mrs. Malcolm McConihe, Mr. and Mrs. George E. Hamilton, jr., and Mr. and Mrs. David H. Blair, with the latter's son, Mr. J. Barnett Douglass. Mr. Samuel H. Kauffmann was seen hurrying through the crowd with his small son, ecstatic at the prospect of his first "big game."

The former Commissioner of the District of Columbia and Mrs. Tihlman Hendrick occupied a box, the latter in a suit of dark brown with sable furs and a small brown felt hat. Mr. and Mrs. R. Golden Donaldson occupied seats near them.

Mrs. Donaldson, former Miss Frances Starr, wore a knitted suit of dark grey and blue, with a grey vagabond hat and a bright scarf knotted about her throat.

Mrs. Woodrow Wilson, widow of the former President, absorbed as she watched the game with a group of friends, wore a black suit with silver fox furs and her characteristic shoulder-bouquet of orchids. Mrs. Eldridge Jordan, smart and blonde, also wore black and near her were seated Senator and Mrs. William H. King. Mrs. King wore a suit of mixed tweed and a hat of eel grey.

Justice Oscar R. Luhring was accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. Thomas R. Shipp and the latter's sister, Mrs. Reinald Werrenrath. Mrs. Shipp wore a costume of black satin with a hat to match and Mrs. Werrenrath was in a tailored suit of oxford grey with a felt hat of a lighter shade. Mr. Joseph Tumulty, with his four charming daughters, all blonde and smartly gowned, were in a box with Mr. and Mrs. John Crosby. Mrs. Crosby wore a suit of reddish-brown trimmed with red fox. Just in back of them sat Mr. and Mrs. Bernard B. Jones, who have just returned from spending the summer at their country home, Audley Farm, near Berryville, Va. Mrs. Jones wore navy blue and a handsome fur coat.

Still further around the diamond were Mr. Lawrence Richey, secretary to former President Hoover, and Mr. and Mrs. Floyd Harrison. Mrs. Harrison wore a costume of deep wine red trimmed with mink and a large brown hat.

Others seen in the crowds were Mr. and Mrs. Prescott Gatley, former Representative John Q. Tilson, Mr. Raymond T. Baker, Mr. and Mrs. John Oliver LaGorce, Mr. Arthur Mullen, jr., Mr. Donald McKnew and Dr. and Mrs. Herbert Schoenfeld.

Senator John E. Erickson, of Montana, is in Washington at the Willard.

Representative Robert L. Doughton, of Laurel Springs, N. C., has arrived in Washington and is at his apartment at Wardman Park Hotel. Representative S. Otis Bland has also come to Washington and is at Wardman Park.

Representative and Mrs. John S. Wood, of Canton, Ga., will come to Washington today or tomorrow to spend several days and while here will be at Wardman Park Hotel, where Representative Wood maintains an apartment during the congressional session.

Representative Ernest W. Gibson, of Vermont, accompanied by his daughter, Miss Doris Gibson, will arrive in Washington tomorrow for the week-end.

Mrs. Morgenthau, Daughter Arrive for Winter.

Mrs. Henry Morgenthau, jr., has joined her husband, the governor of the Farm Credit Administration, at the residence they have leased at 2447 Kalorama road. They have with them for the winter season their daughter, Joan. Mrs. Morgenthau spent the summer at their country home, Fishkill Farms, in Duchess County, N. Y.

Mrs. Charles J. Bell has as her guest Mrs. Wiliam Kerr, of Nova Scotia. Mrs. Bell's daughter, Mrs. Granville Fortesque, who spent the summer at her mother's home, Twin Oaks, is in New York for some time with her husband, Col. Fortesque, and their daughter, Miss Helene Fortesque.

Word has been received of the marriage of Miss Iola K. Ludwig to Mr. Henry N. Brawner, jr., in New York, October 4. Mr. and Mrs. Brawner will make their home in Washington.

Dr. T. M. Schittell has returned to her home at 1329 Sixteenth street after an extensive visit to Germany, Austria and Switzerland, where she has been doing research work.

Col. and Mrs. William J. L. Lyster, U. S. Army, retired, have taken an apartment at 2029 Connecticut avenue.

Capt. John A. Halla, U. S. M. C., Port au Prince, Haiti, and Mrs. Halla are spending a week at the Martinique in Washington.

Maj. LeRoy P. Hunt, U. S. M. C., and Mrs. Hunt have arrived from the Great Lakes Training Station and are at the Martinique for several weeks.

Mr. and Mrs. Paul L. Townsend are at the St. Regis Hotel, New York. They are accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. H. C. Whitehurst, of 3115 Thirty-fourth street.

Basement Bar Brightens Even Dullest Nights

A Downtown Store Offers Entire Layout; Colored Bracelets Swanky.

By Ruth Anne Davis.

Inasmuch as winter is slowly, but surely creeping up on us, we might as well set about making our homes as amusing as possible to compensate for the boat trips, picnics and outdoor sports we've enjoyed during the summer.

A Connecticut avenue store suggests doing this by installing the newest things in bars in your basement. It's great fun fixing up a nondescript room to really look like something anyway—and with a piece as handsome as this curtain bar what a dream of a room one could have!

The bar is mahogany with large bottle drawers which will hold a bounteous suply of what have you. There's also a smaller one to hold the liqueurs and a bottom drawer-tray for ice. The top drawer is divided into compartments to care for the linen and silver.

You've never seen anything more complete! Even the little brass rail in front and the regular paneling! If you can't buy, it's a treat to see it!

If there's anything more fascinating than the old-fashioned "grab bag" it surely must be the 25-cent tables we sometimes find in the department stores. At present there's a fascinating one in a certain Washington store. It includes some lovely models of American colonial hand-painted glassware which you can buy now and use yourself or tuck them away until the time for gifts. There are odd bowls, large and small, glass bells, candlesticks, vases, long and tall, or short and stout, flower pots, cigarette trays, water bottles, cocktail shakers and ice buckets.

Cellophane is not only used now to keep cigarettes fresh, but dresses as well. A G street store has some cellophane garment bags with six velvet covered hangers which will insure your party frocks retaining their fresh, lively look much longer than if they were allowed to hang in the closet squeezed in with heavier garments.

You will find that one of these bags will increase the longevity of the dress, save cleaner's bills and save you from pressing the dress each time you wear it.

Before little girls grow up and go to college and learn to dislike housekeeping it's a good idea to start them off early with the rudiments, anyway. A G street store is offering a delightful means. With the little electric iron, percolator and waffle iron the wee miss may have the time of her life pressing doll clothes, making "pretend" coffee and cooking honest-to-goodness waffles, if nurse will help her with the batter.

One mother said: "But my, the mess we'd have around if I turned my daughter loose with a set like this!" That might be true, but there and then is the chance to bring in another housekeeping lesson—let her learn that she must clean up after herself. More than likely a child would be so pleased with such grown-up toys she'd take being neat as part of the game, and love even that.

If you decide against a whole set you can buy the pieces separately. Here's a nice little Christmas surprise to keep in mind.

We spoke of the array of Hallowe'en costumes in an E street store, but we neglected to mention the interesting assortment of Halloween favors and party decorations. There is a variety of decorative paper candy cups in all forms, from bright orange flowers to black cats and death heads. The pumpkin baskets are particularly attractive and could be effectively matched up with the pumpkin lanterns.

Crepe paper which you can use for wall hangings or table covers is designed with stripes, checks and grotesque figures, which are further carried out in the place cards and tallies and paper napkins. All of these are extremely reasonably priced.

Even if it wasn't a very special value it would be a good buy, but as it is, selling for $1.50 (it used to be $2.20), it really is a bargain. There's a large box of face powder, any shade you like, and a little bottle of perfume, either of two scents. The perfume bottles are inclosed in attractive gold metal cases which make them handy for traveling or carrying in your purse. The manufacturer of these may be one of your favorites. He's well known for the quality of his goods. Unless you'd miss a splendid opportunity, don't fail to inquire!

Although cookies are good, no matter the shape they're in, it is nice to have them cut attractively. After we've spent time and effort on their preparation, we want them to look like something more than plain cookie dabs. Besides, for teas and parties, we like things "fixed up" a bit, and cookies with interesting shapes are very nice to have.

An F street store has some cookie cutters which turn out cakes in six different shapes. The store is having a demonstration on them this week and invites you to drop by and see how it's done.

Jobless Women "On the Road" Are Diminishing

Travelers Aid Official Says Employers Are Giving Them "a Break."

Exit the transient single woman. The NRA has disposed of this problem which, for the last three years, has been confronting Travelers' Aid Societies and other organizations caring for transients in all parts of the country, according to Miss Beatrice Hodgson, assistant secretary of the Washington Travelers' Aid Society. In Washington and many other cities, they are finding jobs and going to work, she says.

Washington employers, especially owners of department and other stores, have been unusually kind to the transient single woman since the advent of the NRA, Miss Hodgson says. Many of these wanderers, who came through the Capital en route to they knew not where, discouraged and disheartened from their encounters on the road and hopeless of finding employment again, suddenly have found a demand for their services, a chance to work and regain their self-respect. Miss Hodgson says:

"No longer is the transient woman being questioned and criticized. She is being accepted for her worth. It is a recognized fact that a transient may become a permanent resident if she is given a means of livelihood.

"The middle-aged woman who lost her job and started out on the road did so because she had no other means of support or any other manner of existence. She did not necessarily deteriorate because of her contacts while on the road. Most of those on the road were frightened; they could see no future for themselves and did what seemed to them the only obvious thing to do.

"The NRA has opened up jobs in their particular field and they are only too happy to be able to readjust themselves again to a normal manner of living.

"These women, many of them friendless and alone, have not been beaten by their bitter experiences of the last few years. They are as ambitious as many youngsters who are just starting out in the business world."

Miss Hodgson also reports there is a decided trend to a "homeward move" by the American boy. Of all people who visit the Travelers' Aid they are the most optimistic of the results of the NRA program. Heretofore they could not see where they would benefit by returning to homes where they would only be a drain on the family purse, but now they are most enthusiastic over the NRA and its results. Today these boys are anxious to get back to a family life. They are tired of their aimless trips over the country and are confident that the NRA will make openings for them in their native towns and cities.

Women Called Upon to Fight School Slashes

Appeal to Organizations Voices Fear Damage Will Be Irreparable.

Women's organizations throughout the country are being asked to study the school situation in their communities, with a view to determine whether over-zealous budget-cutters have gone too far with their depression economies, according to the Woman's Home Companion.

Qustions which are suggested for the consideration of women's clubs include the following: Are any of your local schools overcrowded? Have they cut their curriculum, their force of teachers, their supply of books, to a level of ineffectiveness? Are the schools open to all?

"The autumn," says a bulletin issued by the magazine, "brings such questions sharply to the minds of millions of parents. Before the end of the last term more than 2,500 schools had been shut down and 300,000 children had been sent home to wait for education until some other year. Indications are that the collapse of education may become even more serious this winter.

Closing Held Sheer Waste.

"The closing of a school is a total loss—a sheer waste of the precious time of growing childhood. But in the aggregate there is perhaps even more loss through the lowering of standards in schools which by struggle keep open. Skimped teaching may be better than none. But a few years of it may do permanent harm to vast numbers of children, disgruntled with learning because it has been made unnecessarily tedious and perfunctory.

"Worse yet, the economies necessary now because of the depression are putting damaging ideas into the minds of habitual enemies of the schools. Short-sighted, selfish taxpayers are only too glad at any time to see school budgets slashed. Many believe that they can hold expenditures down to the new level even after prosperity returns.

Fads and Frills Go.

"Fads and frills, as they call them, can fortunately be cut out now, never to be restored. So under the plea of retrenchment many a community is in danger of being robbed of the educational gains of a decade.

"This raid on the schools must stop. The restoration of school budgets must be a first charge of any taxation increase after the absolute essentials of relief for the unemployed have been met. In every district the friends of the school should be organizing now to preserve the ideals of education, to hold before the whole public the duty of carrying on from where we left off."

What Today Means

"Libra."

If October 6 is your birthday, the best hours for you on this date are from 3 to 5 p. m. and from 6:50 to 7:55 p. m. The danger periods are from 11 a. m. to 12:15 p. m., from 8 to 8:30 p. m. and from 10:40 to 11:15 p. m.

Influences operating on this date will probably be of a negative sort; you will not feel able to act forcefully or with eagerness. You will be inclined to put things off, to wait and see how things go, to do anything but act definitely. Serious doubts may appear in the thoughts of those who are engaged to wed, and many will feel hesitant about taking the final step on this day.

The child born on this October 6 will probably have many funny little ways about it. It will keep up an almost continuous stream of chatter, and without realizing it will say and do some very amusing things. It will become deeply engrossed in whatever it is doing, be it work or play, and will be quite oblivious of what goes on about it.

If October 6 is the date of your birth, you probably think pretty well of yourself, without being egotistical to an annoying degree. It is your theory that people take you pretty much at your own valuation and that if you do not rate yourself high, the rest of the world will be inclined to pass you by. Without pushing yourself too much to the front, you make people aware of your presence. Your invariable good humor, your geniality and your appreciation of the beautiful in life, make you a person who is doubtless in great demand socially. You are not the sort of person to stay at home, for you like to be on the go. You have many friends and you retain them for years and years.

Born on October 6, you probably like to gamble and take risks; fate is not usually kind to you in these matters and more often than not things go against you. You will succeed best if you keep your feet on paths well marked and where the breaks are known to be at least 50-50. The chances that you will make a great name for yourself are small. It is possible that you will dabble a bit in the arts. At least, you will have a great appreciation of music and painting. You will do much to encourage others to put forth their best efforts toward the creation of things worthwhile. To your mate and children you will be an inspiration always; for your sake they will do their very best and you will be able to help them over many rough spots.

Successful people born on October 6:

Nathan Appleton, merchant.

Samuel Davis, Confederate spy.

George Westinghouse, manufacturer.

Jenny Lind, opera singer.

A. J. Beveridge, senator.

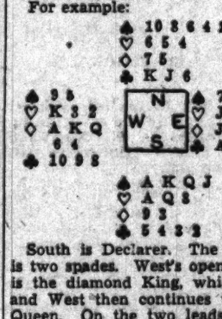
Leads Through Strength and Up to Weakness.

When defending against either a suit or nontrump contract, there are many occasions when the defending player charged with the burden of the lead necessarily has to rely almost exclusively upon his own inference as to the choice of a suit to lead. On such occasions the element of guesswork may be reduced by adhering to the general policy of leading through the strength in Dummy or up to the weakness in Dummy. To state it another way, when sitting at the right of the Dummy hand, it will generally be found advantageous to lead the suit in which Dummy holds tenace positions, but when sitting at the left of the Dummy it will generally be best, lacking other information, to lead the suit in which Dummy is weakest. This is merely an extension of the theory of leading from the weak hand to the strong.

In leading through broken honor strength in Dummy, there is, of course, no assurance that your partner holds the cards over Dummy's holdings. It is a general rule, however, that a lead through this broken strength is more likely to result advantageously than disadvantageously, and the same holds true of a lead up to marked weakness in Dummy.

For example:



South is Declarer. The contract is two spades. West's opening lead is the diamond King, which wins, and West then continues with the Queen. On the two leads of diamonds East plays first the two and then the eight. South plays the three and the nine. It is, of course, apparent to West that in all probability to continue diamonds would permit South to discard a loser in one hand and ruff in the other. Therefore, he must find another lead.

To lead trumps does not appear particularly constructive, as the Dummy has five spades, and any effort to exhaust the trump suit must fail. The heart suit is notably weak in Dummy, and hence, in all probability, is the backbone of Declarer's strength; but even if it is not, no advantage could come from leading hearts, and possibly a trick might be lost by this course.

There remains, then, the club suit, which is in tenace position in the Dummy's hand, and in which West holds a sequence of the Ten, nine and eight. His correct lead, therefore, is now the Ten of clubs. The club Knave is finessed in Dummy and East wins with the Queen. Now if East returns the club at once, South will make his contract; but he applies the second principle discussed above and leads to Dummy's weakness. Inasmuch as he holds a sequence in hearts, he leads the heart Knave. The Declarer must finesse the Queen, and West, winning with the King, again leads the club. The play of North is immaterial, but I will assume that the King is the card chosen. East wins with the Ace and returns not the club but the heart Ten, in order to establish a second trick in hearts. The heart return is won by the Declarer, but he must eventually lose another heart and another club.

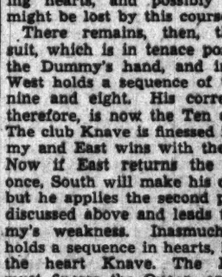
You will note that if East returns a club before returning the second round of hearts, the Declarer will save a trick, as the thirteenth club in his hand will permit his discard of a losing heart in Dummy.

Tomorrow's Hand.

Can East and West legitimately reach a Grand Slam contract on the hands below after North has opened with a bid of one diamond?

North, Dealer.

Neither side vulnerable.



The hand will be discussed in tomorrow's article.

Salads Build Foundation for Tasty Meals

Meats and Vegetables Are Combined in Dishes of Delectability.

(Miss Ruth Chambers, whose articles are a daily feature of this paper, is a home economics lecturer and writer of wide experience. She is a member of the staff of the National Live Stock and Meat Board, has done considerable work in experimental cookery and is a dietitian of note—Editor.)

By Ruth Chambers.

While salads which have their part on the dinner menu are usually an accompaniment to the main dish and are, therefore, light and designed to stimulate the appetite rather than to satisfy it completely, there is another category of salads which form an excellent basis for a lighter meal, such as lunch or supper.

These salads have meat as their basis, combined with vegetables, both starchy and succulent. Cold potatoes or macaroni are used for the starchy ingredient or it may be supplied by the rolls, sandwiches or biscuits served with the salad. Potato chips may also accompany the salads which do not contain potatoes.

The dressings for meat salads are somewhat different from the light cream or French dressing of the dinner salad. A boiled dressing or mayonnaise is better with these meat and vegetable dishes. If the ingredients of the salad are very rich, the boiled or cream dressing is preferable to mayonnaise.

Some Combinations.

Here are some suggestions for salad combinations:

Veal, cabbage and pimento.

Pork, celery, chopped olives, red peppers. (This is sometimes called mock chicken salad.)

Ham, potato and celery with tomato garnish.

Bacon, spinach and cold cooked eggs.

Sweetbreads, celery and peas in cucumber cups.

The meat in these salads is given a more delicate flavor if it is marinated one or two hours with a dressing of one part oil to three parts vinegar, salt and pepper. The vegetables should be crisp and fresh.

Combine the ingredients and the salad dressing shortly before serving, blending well but taking care not to mash the food.

Veal Salad.

Cut cold roast veal into small dice. Add one-half the quantity of crisp celery. Marinate with French dressing. Chill in a cold place. When ready to serve mix with mayonnaise. Season with salt, pepper and paprika. Pile in a mound on a platter garnished with lettuce leaves. Spread a little mayonnaise over the top. Garnish the base with sliced beets, olive rings and pimentos. Sprinkle finely chopped hard-cooked eggs over the top.

For variation, instead of garnishing with vegetables, surround the mound with slices of pineapple over which has been sprinkled riced cream cheese. The pulp of a grapefruit may be added to it and it may be garnished with sections of the fruit.

Sweetbread and Celery Salad.

Cut sweetbreads, which have been parboiled and blanched, into small dice and add as much diced celery. Marinate in a cold place until needed. Mix with mayonnaise dressing. Serve in a cup of crisp lettuce leaves and garnish with slices of sweetbreads coated with jellied mayonnaise.

Jellied Mayonnaise.

Soak 1 teaspoon of gelatin in 2 tablespoons of cold water for 10 minutes; dissolve over hot water. Beat into 1 cup of mayonnaise. Before it hardens spread over the slices of sweetbreads.

This recipe will serve six persons.

Tongue and Spinach Salad.

Cook 1 peck of spinach until tender, drain and press out liquor thoroughly. Season with salt and pepper to taste and 1 teaspoon of lemon juice. Pack in small timbale molds and chill. Slice cold boiled tongue and chill. Garnish each slice of tongue with jellied mayonnaise just before it gets firm and chill again. Unmold the spinach, arrange the tongue around it and garnish lettuce. Top each spinach mold with mayonnaise.

Costume Colors Are Basis For Face Make-Up

Eye Shadow, Mascara, Lip Stick, Rouge Must Blend With Apparel.

So inextricably interwoven is the bond between fashions in costumes and facial make-up this winter that it is practically impossible to consider one without consulting the other.

Go to any facial salon and ask for advice on how to make up your face. The expert will beg the question right off, with a cross-examination of whither you are going? What you expect to wear? What the lighting effects will probably be?

If you are able to provide definitely informative answers, her face will doubtless be wreathed in smiles of delighted approval of her client's intelligence, and she will launch at once into an authoritative discourse on your requirements.

However, if you should be vague in your description of your intended costume, hazy in your conception of the background against which your projected excursion is to take you, the salonist's face will probably fall, unless she is a consummate actress, trained in concealing disappointment.

Styles in Makeup.

There are definite styles in make-up nowadays. For istance, if one has a costume of autumn brown—that glowing, russet-gold, new color—one must ensemble one's face and hands in keeping. Bronze eye shadow, with brown mascara, is advocated. Rouge and lipstick of a deep true red, not orange, yellowish, purplish or brown, is urged. Face powder used in this ensemle is smoothly cream-colored. The finger nails are tinted in bronze. An the entire ensemle is devastatingly flattering to the brown-haired lady.

With Bottle Green.

If by chance your hair is auburn, and your costume bottle green, then green eye shadow, green nail polish, lipstick and rouge of brilliant red and powder of a rich rachel shade are the arbitrary edict of stylists. Green, they tell us, is apt to bring out harsh, spotty incongruities in anything less than a perfect complexion, hence the concealing curtain of heavy rachel powder.

Suppose you are a blonde, and you have deliberately—and wickedly, and wisely!—chosen a sealing-wax red evening dress. Then the eye shadow must be blue, and your mascara the same. Transparent light pinkish powder will counterbalancee the striking effect of this. Lipstick and rouge of sealing wax red is the master stroke, particularly well emphasized by nails tinted in the same color.

Colors for Brunettes.

Brunettes can achieve a breathtaking smartness when dressed in eel gray; nails done in onyx black, eyes gray-shadowed, lashes mascaraed in brilliant black; lips and cheeks touched with vivid rose, and face and throat evenly dusted with delicate rose powder. The rose powder is very important. Without it, one might find the eel gray costume had invested the face with a mal de mer pallor.

There is a make-up style for the white-haired woman, too. And it goes well for her gray-haired sister. This make-up was built about the grape-purple costume color, but should prove equally effective with any of the wine or purple shades.

Violet iridescent eye shadow is used, with purple mascara and purple nail polish. The powder used with this make-up is of delicate pink-orchid shade.

Those Graceful Curves Can Be Found at Home

Housework Can Be Turned Into Exercise, Bringing Sylphlike Figures.

Housework can be made as good a "conditioning" and "slenderizing" exercise for women as golf or tennis, according to expert opinions gathered by Ruth Chandler Moore. Dishwashing, scrubbing, sewing, bed-making, sweeping, ironing and, especially, running up and down stairs, can melt off hips and surplus poundage and can act as a general workout to give a woman the smooth, elastic muscles and lithe, erect carriage which are supposed to result from golf, tennis or swimming.

The main thing is to learn the correct "form." It's the way you work that matters.

"Too bad women don't go after their housework the way they do their sports," says Jack Auer, who directs a fashionable gymnasium for women in New York, in an article in Collier's Weekly. "They take up sports to improve their figures, carefully observant to get the right stance and follow-through and posture. Then they slump and go at their housework any old way. No wonder it pulls so many of them out of shape—when it ought to be as good a workout as any sport! Women can make first-class conditioning exercises out of their housework if they'll only learn how to do it right."

It's All Exercise.

It makes no difference, then, whether a woman gets her exercise in a gymnasium or a kitchen, just so she gets the right kind. And if she tackles housework with the same emphasis on form and stroke that she'd give her golf game, it will do the same thing for her figure.

The conclusions reached in the Collier's study of housework as exercise are, in part, the following:

"It's a matter of mechanics, really. We study the instructions that come with our labor-saving devices and run them with conscientious regard for their efficiency and their expensive insides, and it's high time we learned to do the same for the machine that inevitably shares the work of every one of them—the houseworker's own human body. For that machine is designed on engineering principles, too—if you use it correctly, it will run, as the saying goes, like a bird—and with just as little slack muscle as a bird has, too!

Comes the Reckoning.

"And there's the catch. Even if you don't care how tired you get or how your machine grinds and protests, you always care when it gets out of shape.

"So if housework is your main physical activity, make it a slenderizing instead of a thickening one by using your bones and muscles the right way—the way that retains or regains the smooth-flowing lines of youth.

"Take lifting, for example. For generations that's done plenty of damage to the female form divine. But within reason, and properly performed, the mechanics of flopping mattresses, shifting furniture and lifting clothes baskets has all the elements of first-rate reducing exercises. The idea is to use your body as a lever, not as a derrick. That is, don't collapse your shoulders and tug with your arms from above—that simply bows you to the unmistakable drudgery curve. Instead, limber your knees and get down under the weight. Then contract the front muscles of your hips, thus automatically releasing your back muscles so that your hips drop down under you. Now push up, letting the strength come, not from your arms and back, but from the strong central region of your hips—and you not only hoist the weight with the least possible effort, but give a valuable strengthening exercise to that broad middle band of muscles which, when properly taut, will keep you flatter than the best girdle that ever came out of a shop.

For Lighter Work, Too.

"Even for lighter work, you should use your hip muscles as much as possible. Push with them when you reach up with the ceiling brush after dust strings and stoop with them when you get down into corners with the dust pan.

"Remember the all-important posture trick of keeping hips forward instead of back, for it's guaranteed to cut down hip measure better than miles of cross-country tramping, and it will give you a lightness of step that any athlete might envy.

"But only, of course, if you have a good, steady pair of shoes under you. You wouldn't expect to play good golf—nor get much fun out of it—in a pair of wornout party slippers, and you certainly can't expect to clean and sweep easily—much less improve your figure while you do it—if a pair of spike heels are pulling every bone and muscle out of line."

No End of Books

Alice Roosevelt Longworth's Memoirs Are Taken Lightly by Critics Who Fail to See True Worth of Serial.

It is perhaps a pity that Alice Roosevelt Longworth's memoirs, published serially in the Ladies' Home Journal last spring, met with such a guffaw from the lighter wits. True, she wrote of teas and talk and dinners and nice fresh sunshine, but Messrs. Frank Sullivan et al have underestimated Alice. She had more to say. Now that "Crowded Hours" is to appear as a book in November, the reader will find her "speaking out" on such topics as the poker sessions of Harding and the Ohio Gang in the White House room where her father discussed literature with Henry Adams and Jules Jusserand. What wouldn't beseem the pages of the Journal nevertheless must out.

Knopf's "Brown Book of the Hitler Terror" sold the first edition of 2,000 copies the day it was published. Another edition of the same number was half-sold before it appeared a week later. The Hitler lode seems worth mining.

Branch Cabell has sent the manuscript of a new novel to Robert McBride, with the name still unchosen. Author and publisher now must cudgel their brains to supply the lack before publication in January. But has no one thought of putting out a book without a title? It might work once, from sheer novelty.

Dr. Logan Clendenning, of Kansas City, made "The Human Body" one of the soundest and most entertaining books on physiology ever written; 130,000 copies have sold to date. He now is following this with a layman's history of medicine—"Behind the Doctor"—which Knopf will publish on October 13. If his sense and gaiety have not abated, this ought to be on the imperative reading list of everyone the least interested in this topic.

The late Ring Lardner, a writer of far greater importance and stature than his unassuming ways would indicate, once put some of his best work into a book called "How to Write Short Stories"—the slight edge of vainglory being removed entirely by ludicrous introductions to each tale. Now comes a book, "How Not to Write Short Stories," for which Alfred Dashiell, of Scribner's Magazine, is collecting material. It is to be published soon by Long & Smith. One hopes it will do for fiction what D. B. Wyndham Lewis' "The Stuffed Owl" did for poetry, and contain the best possible examples of the worst possible writing.

Horace Liveright died September 24 at the age of 49. He was the first to publish the work of Sherwood Anderson, Eugene O'Neill, Robinson Jeffers and Hendrik Willem Van Loon, as well as the first American editions of Jacob Wassermann. His firm was famous during the brave '20s for its lavish entertainment of literary celebrities, and he died leaving an estate of $500

Prize-Winner.

A novel, "THE FAULT OF ANGELS," by Paul Horgan. (Harper, $2.50.)

The Harper prize novel competition again has produced a novel by a new author which is a real contribution to contemporary literature. The current winner of the biennial award, "The Fault of Angels," by Paul Horgan, is a worthy addition to the five previous prize novels—"The Able McLaughlins," "The Perennial Bachelor," "The Grandmothers," "The Dark Journey," and "Brothers in the West."

Aptly named, the book portrays the tempestuous lives of a group of artists, together with their vacuous and ostentatious patrons. The emotional passages and the clashing temperaments of the sophisticated artists provide something really original in literature.

Dorchester, a typical industrial American city, provides the setting for the satiric comedy. A bachelor millionaire builds and endows an operatic theater and music conservatory in a futile attempt to gain that something he has missed in life. But even the theater must attain an ostentatious success—Henry Ganson can not countenance less in anything.

Artists Pictured Perfectly.

The group of artists drawn to the operatic center are delineated with uncanny precision. Their fiery temperaments and constantly clashing ambitions provide a vivd drama. Into this group comes the exotic and enigmatic Nina, whose ways the artists themselves can not fathom.

A reformer, a martyr distressingly unconcerned about conventions, she is a mysterious character. She wins love and admiration with her exotic out devastating personality.

Around her revolve the other artistic temperaments and personalities. Lost loves and disappointments, selfishness and deceit are woven subtly in this literary mosaic.

"Happiness at All Costs."

Nina is a Russian of royal lineage and training. She is an exponent of the philosophy that ultimately nothing matters in this life; hence happiness should be attained at all costs by every one. Actuated by this philosophy, she naturally thinks Americans live singularly futile lives. She attempts to reform the millionaire founder of the operatic center. She goes to extremes to help every one. She tries to shoulder all burdens. Finally she admits defeat and flies from the American scene, which she never can understand.

The novel is on a high plane, but a few distressingly melodramatic scenes seem entirely out of harmony with the elevated purpose and thought.

Mr. Horgan shows a thorough knowledge of artistic temperaments and selfish patrons of opera and the arts. He was born in Buffalo and grew up in the midst of an artistic family. He attended the Eastman School of Music and was associated in various capacities with the Rochester American Opera Company. At present he is librarian at a military institute in New Mexico.

DUNCAN PRICE.

Modern Italian Stories.

"ROBINO AND OTHER STORIES," by Umberto Fracchia; translated from the Italian by Sir S. H. Scott; Robert O. Ballou, $1.50.

In this group of four simple stories, Fracchia has combined the delicacy of fairy tales with the reality of naturalism, avoiding both whimsicality and flatness. His characters are the pitiable poor, but so gently depicted that their want becomes a kind of costume for a puppet play and adds a sweetness to their simple lives.

One tale is about a mother's fear for Robino, a beautiful crippled child, whom she carries about all day so that he may be spared a little longer from the knowledge that he can never walk. The time draws nearer, her fears increase; then, going to church in despair, she meets a lame beggar who changes her plans so thoroughly that in the end she ceases to think of the helpless child. The tale of Corilla and Frigellina is a reversal of the old Cinderella theme, brought into new life with psychological credibility.

The other two stories, "The Wedding Day" and "Autumn Rain," take up the moments of great emotion in the lives of a young pair of lovers and in an old rag picker approaching death at the end of summer. Sensitive and imagistic, they breathe a quiet pathos.

The author, little known in this country, has written several "romances" in his native Italian and, strangely enough, a book entitled "The Italian Navy in the European War," translated into English in 1918. Already secure in Italian letters, he died in an accident in 1930, at the age of 41. Perhaps Sir S. H. Scott will translate later some of the other works he left. They would be a delight to read, both as Italian stories and as good English prose. M. M. MORGAN.

Capital Waits Visit of Former Nina Crosby

Marquise de Polignac Here Soon on First Visit in 15 Years.

The Marquise de Polignac, the former Miss Nina Crosby, of Boston, and well known here and abroad, will arrive next Tuesday aboard the Ile de France for her first visit in America in 15 years. While in New York she will be the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt Whitney at River House. She will be entertained extensively during her short visit in New York and will be the guest of friends in Washington, Boston and Chicago.

The Marquise is the former wife of Mr. James Biddle Eustis, of New Orleans, who died in 1915. In 1917 she married the Marquis de Polignac, the head of the great champagne house of Pommery, and since that time has resided in France. She maintains an apartment in Paris, but spends most of her time in the Chateau des Crayeres, at Rheims.

Mrs. Roosevelt Praises Work For Cripples

First Lady Tells Kiwanis Club That She, Too, Wore a Brace.

Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt yesterday gave her first talk of the winter's season at a luncheon of the Kiwanis Club in the ballroom of the Mayflower Hotel. In addition to being a special Ladies' Day function, this luncheon celebrated the tenth anniversary of the Kiwanis "underprivileged child" work program, for the care of crippled children.

Mrs. Roosevelt's address followed a short resume of Kiwanis achievement by Dewey Zirkin, acting toastmaster, who informed the gathering that the Kiwanis Club had given aid to 500 crippled children in the last 10 years. Of interest at the speakers' table and especially, it seemed, to Mrs. Roosevelt, was a small testimony to these facts in the Eton-coated figure of 12-year-old Belmont Hoover, enabled to walk again through Kiwanis surgical treatment. During her charmingly informal talk, Mrs. Roosevelt turned several times to smile at Young Belmont, three seats away.

She, Too, Wore a Brace.

Assuring Kiwanis members of her sympathy for such work, Mrs. Roosevelt said:

"I, too, wore a brace on my back for a number of years when I was a girl."

She then narrated a favorite anecdote about the work of her famous kinsman, the late President Theodore Roosevelt, in founding the New York Orthopedic Hospital for Children.

She told of "Teddy's" strategy in raising funds.

"He asked his friends in to tea one day and served them a roomful of crippled children instead!" she related.

After that, she said, the money poured in.

Mrs. Roosevelt stressed the fact that, in addition to physical betterment, such work as the Kiwanis Club is conducting enables children to grow up "mentally confident" that they can make a place for themselves in the world.

Gets Bouquet of Orchids.

Distinguished Guest.

Seated at the flag-draped speaker's table with Mrs. Roosevelt were George H. Winslow, secretary emeritus, Washington Club, and Mrs. Winslow; Miss Mattie Gibson, superintendent of Children's Hospital; Dr. Luther H. Reichelderfer, president, District Board of Commissioners, and Mrs. Reichelderfer; Mrs. Beulah Drake, superintendent of Whiteman School for Crippled Children; Dr. Custis Lee Hall, orthopedic surgeon, who described the medical work accomplished by the club; Mr. Edwin F. Hill, district governor, Capital Kiwanis District, and Mrs. Hill; Mrs. Whitman Cross, president, Instructive Visiting Nurse Society.

The Family Marketer

Squash, Okra, Lima Beans, Cabbage Are Food Bargains.

The market today is interesting from the budgeters' viewpoint, as the price of several popular vegetables has dropped considerably. It isn't unusual this time of year to see the cost of things increased as local products die out, but it is something of a phenomena to see shipped goods as reasonable as now.

Hard, white cabbage from New York, which has been 7 cents a pound is 2 pounds for 7 cents today. As you know, this is ideal for cole slaw, but isn't as tender for cooking purposes as local cabbage, now selling for 4 cents a pound. This variety is darker green and has a much looser head.

Hubbard squash is down to 3 cents a pound today, although the green and yellow kinds remain the same two pounds for 15 cents. The crusty looking Hubbard squash, when carefully baked in a slow oven and served with plenty of butter, is one of the most delicious dishes one can serve this time of year.

Okra Cheap and Tasty.

Local okra is here in the pink of condition. Dealers are unanimous in saying that housewives would do well to serve it now while the serving is good. In a few weeks the Florida shipments will be coming in and the price is likely to rise to 50 cents a pound, as it did last winter. Don't forget, okra is the finishing touch to old-fashioned vegetable soup or an honest-to-goodness stew.

Broccoli should, by rights, have been cheaper today with cool weather facilitating its shipping, but you'll find the price the same. Better luck tomorrow!

The two kinds of beans on the market sold three pounds for 25 cents, and three pounds for 19 cents, respectively. The first are the round beans, excellent for cooking; the others, the flat ones which easily boil to pieces, so that even for stews they're not particularly well-adapted.

You will find, when buying them canned, that the better beans sell for 25 cents a can, and others often four cans for 25 cents.

Lima Beans Are Lower.

Even lima beans consented to a little reduction today, dropping from their customary 50 cents a pint to a paltry 45 cents. Despite the price they're bringing now, which we confess not to like, we must admit that as a general thing the quality of beans on the market lately has been the very best.

Sweet potatoes, too, have fallen in line with lower prices. You can buy 4 pounds for 13 cents, and count on their being the best home grown. Have you ever tried them souffled? Or in croquettes? Here are the recipes:

How to Fix Sweet Potatoes.

Souffled: Cut them up raw into quarter-inch slices, pare them oval shaped 2¾ by 1½ inches, fry slowly in white fat, to cook without coloring or stiffening; drain; 10 minutes later throw them back into hot fat. They should puff out considerably.

Croquettes: After potatoes are roasted, cut them lengthwise in two, and empty out the insides; to this add salt, nutmeg, egg yolks and fresh butter; mix well together and when the preparation is thoroughly cold, roll it into inch and three-quarter diameter balls. Dip them in egg, roll in bread crumbs and fry to a fine golden brown. Dress in a circle, having a bunch of parsley to decorate the center.

Celery hearts from Florida are selling quite reasonably for 12 cents a bunch, and one bunch is ample to serve with a meal. These are particularly tender and tasty now.

What's in Fashion?

Neatness Trend Increases Double-Breasted Wearers

Directed by Amos Parrish

Information as to where styles of the type illustrated and their variations are available in Washington will be given by the Fashion Department, The Washington Post, on request.

Next time you see a picture of King George, Will Rogers, Alfred Smith or Pierpont Morgan, chances are now two to one you'll see them in double-breasted suits.

If you get around to the campuses of Yale, Princeton or Harvard this fall, or pass through Wall street or LaSalle street, you'll notice this same trend—more double-breasteds than ever among better-dressing men.

The navies of the world have long recognized the double-breasted as the most spruce, most masculine, and most dashing kind of outfit for their officers. It's hard to see why.

Dressiest for Daytime.

First of all, the double-breasted is the dressiest daytime suit a man can wear. The roll of a double-breasted's lapels, the flat expanse of fabric across the front, the slick way it fits the body (when properly tailored) all give a man who wears it the daytime dress-up appearance that a full-dress suit lends him at night.

Another important point is that the news is getting around that the double-breasted looks well on nearly all types of men. (Fashion plates and six-footers once were supposed to have the sole right to wear this model.)

Helps Lengthen Figure.

The long, diagonal front line of the lapel gives men the added length of figure they can always use to advantage. It doesn't cut down or spread you out. Witness Paul Whiteman, who wore the double-breasted when he was tons bigger than he is today. And still wears it.

So, if you're one of the millions who've had a single-breasted suit complex all your life, you'll have to concede that this winter double-breasteds are going great guns. Because they're dressy, comfortable, wearable by almost all men. Especially in the smoother finished fabrics—the finished and unfinished worsteds. And in a wide variety of neat patterns—(stripes of a neat type are ideally suited to double-breasted modeling).

This doesn't mean that the single-breasted has joined the vanishing Indians. It means that the single-breasted, which has been almost a prescribed uniform for the average American, now has a worthy and equally wearable companion in the double-breasted suit.

Nor does it mean that buying a double-breasted is going to make your friends mistake you for the Prince of Wales. There are certain rules about the cut of double-breasteds for certain types of men. Some look well in one kind, some in another, some simply should not wear them. Our fashion bureau's new leaflet—"Best Suit Models for Tall, Short or Stout Men"—tells you what you should know about this. Better send for it.

Sleep Will Come.

By Katherine W. Smith.

When sleep will come and lay his fingers
Wearily upon my eyes,
And night will fold his cloak around me
So that I may rest, no sighs.

That winds may breathe will find an answer
On my lips . . . Why do I pray
That sleep's sad fingers on my eyes will Linger . . . never draw away?

Scout Leaders' Course at G. W. U.

The training committee of the District of Columbia Council, Boy Scouts of America, has announced a training course in the elements of scoutmastership, to begin Wednesday evening, October 18, at 7 p. m. The sessions will be held in room 16, Corcoran Hall, George Washington University.

The course will operate as a Scout troop, with patrols, a troop scribe, and troop committeemen, and will be carried on as nearly as possible like a normal Scout troop.

A premeeting of the men who will serve at the course will be held at Scout Headquarters Wednesday, October 11, at 7 p. m.

The ten indoor sessions of the course will include such materials as:

The work of the tenderfoot, second class and first class Scout; scouting objectives and programs, the patrol unit in scouting, running the troop, the troop committee at work, the out in scouting, good turns and good citizenship, dangers and difficulties that boys face, why boys drop out of scouting, men of character trained for citizenship.

There will be two outdoor sessions in addition to the indoor work. At these outdoor sessions such work as fire building, hiking, signaling, &c., will be covered.

The course is provided primarily for scoutmasters, assistant scoutmasters, junior assistant scoutmaster, troop committeemen and fathers of Scouts. But any interested men are urged to make inquiries about enrolling.

Over Hundred at Scouters' Rally.

More than 100 scoutmasters, assistant scoutmasters, troop committeemen and other scouters, crowded the private dining room at Sholl's last Tuesday evening to participate in the autumn Scouters' rally Lorne W. Barclay, a member of the executive board of the District of Columbia Council and chairman of the troop organization committee, presided.

The seventh (Potomac) division carried off attendance honors, with seventeen men present, and the White House Division was a close second with fourteen men attending. Troop 14, with an attendance of 8 men, carried off the honors for the best troop attendance.

Commodore W. E. Longfellow, assisted by Dean Longfellow and Wade Barstow, put on a demonstration of uses of the neckerchief and other presentations were made by Linn C. Drake, Scout executive, and by Virgil E. Howard, P. L. Ports, William H. Murray and E. C. Hartung.

More than a hundred training course certificates were presented for courses completed during the last six months.

The members present requested that a similar rally be planned for early in the spring.

Suggestions for Fall and Winter.

Among the suggestions by Scouters of events to be included in the program of the Scouting year just opening is a suggestion of a first aid competition to be carried out first among the patrols of the troop, then by divisions and finally by a council-wide rally this fall.

Many troops have indicated an interest in a mountain hike on Tranksgiving week-end and requests for a training course for scribes and other junior leaders have been made.

Edward C. Hartung, District commissioner of the thirteenth division, has advanced the idea that "Every Scouter get a Scouter." The carrying out of this slogan on the part of every Scout leader in the District of Columbia Council will contribute much to making the ten-year objective of the Boy Scouts of America a reality.

Troop 72 Announces Full Program.

Troop 72, conducted by the Church of the Pilgrims, Twenty-second and P streets, announces a full program of scouting activities for the year ahead. The troop has procured the use of a cabin and plans to do a considerable amount of fall and winter hiking and camping.

The troop will be largely represented at the court of awards, October 14, and expects to add to its group of five eagle Scouts.

Troop 72 was awarded a special certificate in the national contest for well uniformed troops. Every Scout in the troop has a complete uniform.

"The Live Wire," the monthly publication of the troop, will bring out its first fall number within the next few days. The scoutmaster of Troop 72 is Lacy P. McCulloch.

Troop Nut-Gathering Hikes.

Various troops have announced as one of their major autumn activities the gathering of nut seeds, which will be used later for planting purposes. Troops are especially enthusiastic about gathering walnuts from historic places, such as Mount Vernon, Fredericksburg, Wakefield, Arlington, Gettysburg, along the tow path of the canal, &c.

Last year the honor of gathering the largest number of walnuts went to Troop 52, All Saints' Episcopal Church, Chevy Chase. This group gathered 42 bushels of walnuts. Approximately 25 troops of the District of Columbia took part in nut-gathering projects in 1932.

Plan Monthly Hobby Contests.

Scouts in the troops of the Fourth Division are preparing to take part in a series of exhibit contests, a different contest each month, from October to May, according to an announcement from Harry L. Watson, Assistant District Commissioner, who is in charge of the series of contests.

The specifications for entries in the October contest are: Nut collection—Mounted specimens of 10 nuts, majority of which shall be native to Eastern United States. If desired, a nut may be exhibited as a whole and also cracked in half, but when so shown shall be counted only as one nut. If several species of the same nut occur, only two species may be represented in the display.

Sea Scout Activities Under Way.

Sea Scout activities this fall have started off with a good turn in seagoing style. Several of the ships in Washington assisted the President's Cup regatta committee by patrolling the course on Saturday to keep drifting and derelict logs out of the course.

Skipper Fred Tilp, of the Sea Scout ship Corinthian, with his two catboats; Skipper Harold Hennison, of the Sea Scout ship Pharos, with their newly constructed boat, and Skipper Trumbull, of the Sea Scout ship Northern Star, with their cutter, have helped.

A Sea Scout training course for leaders will start Thursday, October 12, at the Sea Scout base, and will continue for five Thursdays from 7:30 to 9:30 p. m. This is the first training course of this kind to be given in Washington for several years.

The regional Sea Scout director, Lee Calahan, will take part in the training. The Sea Scout base is being prepared for the course.

Scouts and Fire Prevention Week.

Safety and fire prevention loom large among the annual projects of Boy Scout troops, and many troops are planning special recognition of National Fire Prevention Week, which has been proclaimed by the President to extend from October 8 to 14.

Each year several hundred of the District of Columbia Scouts appear before firemen and other qualified counselors and pass examinations on firemanship and fire prevention.

Troop Celebrates Anniversary.

Troop 48, conducted by the Anacostia M. E. Church, held its twentieth anniversary banquet on Wednesday evening. Dr. William B. Marshall, who founded the troop in 1913, gave the history of the growth of this unit. Edward Chaney is the present scoutmaster, having served in this post for more than seven years.

Guests included Frank Young, district commissioner of the Fourteentn division, and Walter MacPeek, educational director of the District of Columbia Council.

Troop 56 Publishes Paper.

Another Washington troop is entering on a journalism project through the establishment of a troop newspaper by Troop 56, conducted by the Peck Memorial Chapel. Last Friday and Saturday evenings were devoted to preparing the first issue of 56's paper, which will be issued for the first time tonight.

Troop 8 Elects Officers.

At the annual meeting of Troop 8, conducted by All Souls' Church, Woodley road and Cathedral avenue, Friday, September 29, Ned Nye was chosen senior patrol leader; Spike Burnet, scribe, and Ken Wright, Dick Ruoff and Arthur Smith, patrol leaders. Two Scouts were advanced to the rank of junior assistant scoutmaster—Mason Gray and Bronson Smith. Bronson Smith has been appointed troop bugler, William Leith and Richard Lyon were chosen junior assistant scoutmasters.

In conformity with custom, eight new goals were picked for the year 1933-34.

How to Keep Well

By Dr. W. A. Evans.

Why Is Your Rash?

Blood purifiers can be emptied in the sewer. They never were any good. This has been known for a long time. A good many thousand persons have found it out by experience, paying for their own education. But negative information is not appreciated. Now we know the causes of most of the eruptions for which we formerly took blood purifiers. When positive information began to accumulate, people became willing to accept the negative information and act on it.

Rashes are not due to impurities in the blood. On the other hand, they are due to definite causes, generally external, and these can usually be discovered if some one will search persistently and intelligently.

A large part of these eruptions, especially afound the face and neck, are due to the use of cosmetics. Dr. Lester Hollander contributes a report of three cases of persistent rash due to the use of a preparation that is applied to make the hair wave. Finding the cause in these cases was not easy, partly because of a deeply rooted secretiveness about the use of cosmetics and partly for other reasons. In these instances cure followed when the hair was thoroughly shampooed and the bed linen changed. Prevention required nothing more than a discontinuance of the habit of having the hair waved periodically.

So many reports of rashes due to cosmetics have been made that the only excuse for abstracting another one here is to give publicity to lay readers of certain peculiarities of cosmetic rashes, given by Dr. Hollander.

Scalp—Consider hair tonics and dyes. The tonics that cause rashes are those that irritate, such as capsicum and cantharides. These rashes appear promptly after use.

Forehead—Hair lotions, hair dyes, face creams.

Armpits — Perspiration controls, deodorants, perfumes, depilatories, powders.

Nails—Paints and manicure preparations.

Legs and feet—Deodorants, perfumes, powders, depilatories, dyes.

Eruptions due to perfumes follow exposure to sunlight. Exposure to light is necessary to make most perfumes poisonous to the skin.

In eruptions due to cosmetics itching is apt to be out of proportion to all other symptoms. If a rash is due to an irritating ingredient in a cosmetic, as in a hair tonic, it is apt to appear quickly after the application of the tonic and to be accompanied by a good deal of redness. Rashes due to cosmetics are rarely pustular. If they are so, it is likely to be because of scratching or to lack of cleanliness.

For many years our best doctors have prescribed creosote in some form for coughs, colds and bronchitis, knowing how dangerous it is to let them hang on.

Creomulsion with creosote and six other highly important medicinal elements, quickly and effectively stops all coughs and colds that otherwise might lead to serious trouble.

Creomulsion is powerful in the treatment of all colds and coughs, yet it is absolutely harmless and is pleasant and easy to take.

Your own druggist guarantees Creomulsion by refunding your money if you are not relieved after taking Creomulsion as directed. Beware the cough or cold that hangs on. Always keep Creomulsion on hand for instant use. (adv.)

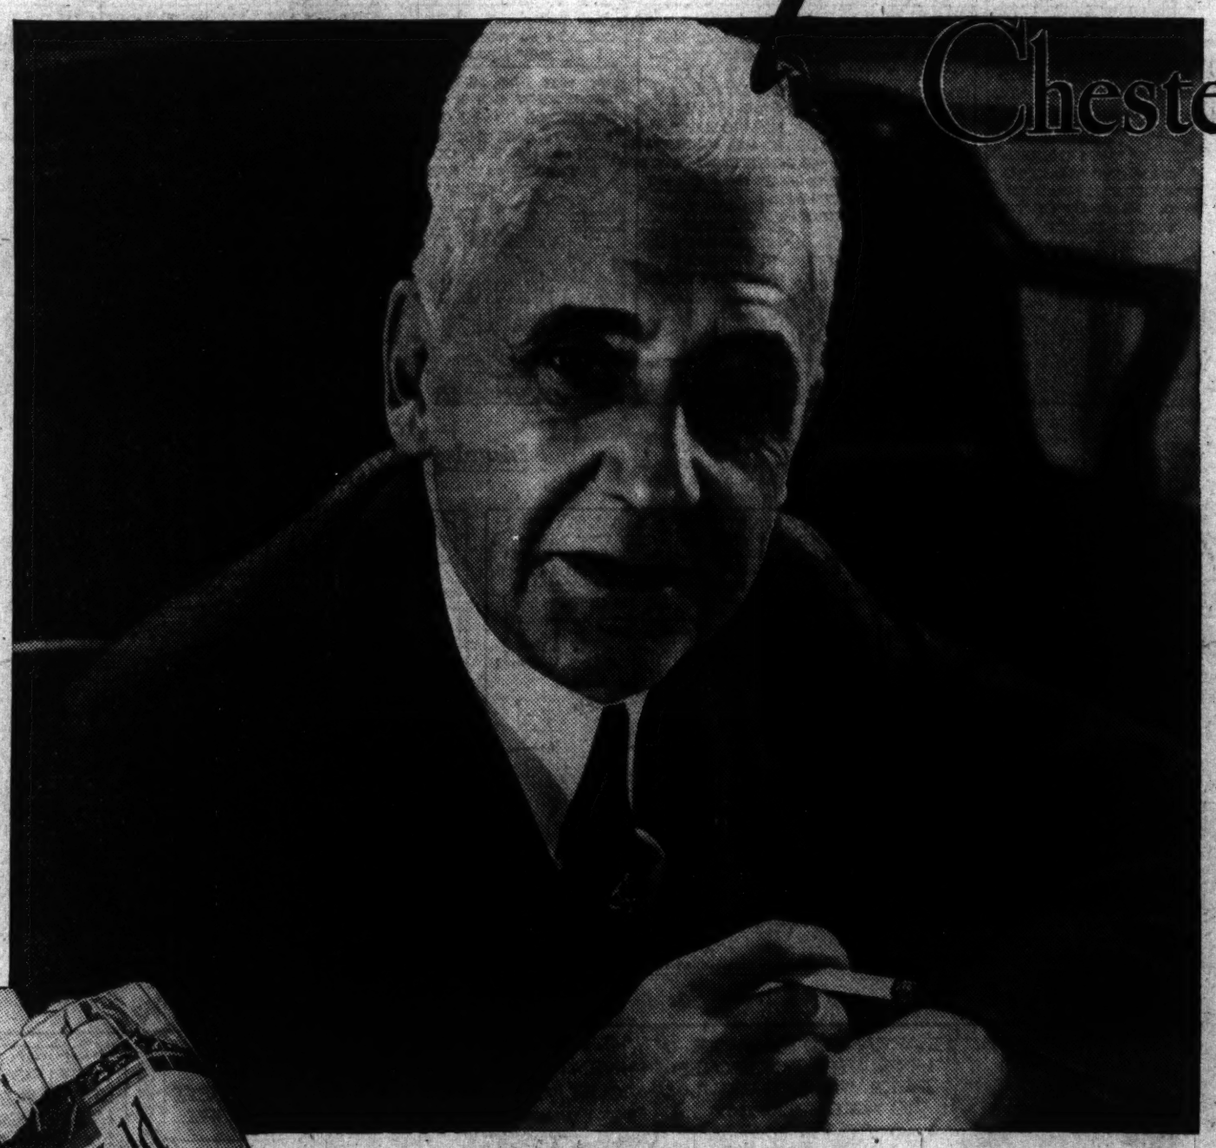
Why—



Chesterfields are Milder

TOBACCO to grow, to ripen and become mellow, has to take in or absorb something . . . not Vitamin D, of course, but something that it gets from the right amount of Sunshine

It's the Southern sunshine you read about, combined with the right sort of climate and moisture, that makes the Carolinas, Georgia, Kentucky, Maryland, and Virginia the best tobacco country in the world.

You can stand down there in that Southern sunshine and almost see it grow.

This ripe, mellow tobacco is skillfully cured by the farmer. Then, for 30 months, it's aged — just like fine wine.

It takes the right quantity of each kind of these tobaccos, blended and cross-blended — then seasoned with Turkish, to make a milder cigarette. Sunshine helps. Just try it!

Chicago May.

"It's best to walk in virtue's way," when dying, said Chicago May, a woman who had garnered fame in every sort of sinful game. Before she died she wrote a book which shows the most successful crook goes broke before the end is reached; in youth she stole, in age she preached. The truth came home to poor old May that crime, as business, doesn't pay; before they placed her underground she tried this doctrine to expound; she lacked the culture we desire, the fervor and poetic fire, but she was well equipped to say that crime's a trade that doesn't pay. Few criminals have had her skill; she robbed the coffer and the till, and left no easy clews behind for thorough-going cops to find. She knew some forty kinds of fraud by which to gain a rich man's wad; she could put on a duchess air and fool the merchants anywhere. Yet all her skill could not avail to keep the lady out of jail, and when she wasn't wearing bells she spent long years in prison cells. When she waxed old her skill was gone, and all her doodads were in pawn, her former friends, all crooks and knaves, were planted in their unmarked graves, and as she, dying, hit the hay, she told the doc "Crime doesn't pay."

Stocks Beaten In Efforts to Renew Rally

List Drifts Lower Under Lighter Turnover of 1,640,520 Shares.

New York, Oct. 5 (AP).—Stocks today were unable to follow up the rally of their previous market and with commodities sagging the list drifted to a lower close. Volume, however, contracted on the decline, sales being reduced to 1,640,520 shares.

Shares appeared to have been rather tired by their exertions of yesterday and with immediate needs of covering shorts satisfied the market found itself without aggresive support. Nevertheless, profit-taking sales uncovered bids at moderate concessions from Wednesday's finals and the average net decline was held to approximately a point.

Steel issues were a trifle flabby on the heels of railroad coordinator Eastman's letter to the producers concerning rail orders. No comment on the question of reducing prices for this material was available at steel company offices. U. S. steel common was off a point most of the day; it finished 1⅛ down and the preferred lost nearly as much.

Third quarter earnings results for this company will be available late in October, indications being that results may well have been less satisfactory than those of the second when an operating profit was shown.

Utility shares held up reasonably well, notwithstanding a reduction in the Columbia Gas dividend from 20 cents to 12½, payable in preference stock, as had been the recent custom. The company said sales of gas and electricity had improved in recent months, but that the gain had not offset higher taxes. It also pointed out that code compliance had had the immediate effect of stepping up operating costs.

American Telephone was steady to firm, helped by reports that Bell System installations had shown a net gain in September. Rails were mostly lower, Union Pacific and New York Central easing more than a point. Such recent favorites in the automobile group as General Motors and Chrysler encountered profit-taking.

Failures Index Cut 15.1 Points Since August

New York, Oct. 5.—Dun's Insolvency Index for the three weeks of September was 72.8. The number is thus the lowest for any similar period, as well as for any other month, in many years. It compares with 87.9 for the month of August this year, a decline of 15.1 points.

This is an exceptional reduction for a single month, and testifies to the great change for the better that is occurring at this time in the matter of business failures in the United States.

For the five-year period from 1925 to 1929, inclusive, a normal time for these later years, the Insolvency Index for September was 87.2.

Heavy September Drop.

The September figures this year are 14.4 points below the September record for the five years mentioned. For the month of August in those five years, the Insolvency Index was 90.9, the reduction for September for the same period being only 2.7 points. The great improvement this year could hardly be more clearly demonstrated.

For the past two or three years, when insolvencies were increasingly numerous, these figures were high.

In September of last year, Dun's Insolvency Index stood at 130.3 and for the same time in 1931, it was 114.3. In August, 1932, it also was high, standing at 160.1.

There was, however, a reduction of 29.8 points from August to September in that year, which was unusually large.

Reduction In 1932.

The improvement thus indicated however, was not maintained in the succeeding months. In 1931 there was, on the other hand, an increase of 2.9 points from August to September, which also was unusual.

The figures printed in the accompanying table are computed on the basis of the number of commercial insolvencies to each 10,000 firms in business:

United States Exports Climb As General Trade Improves

Half-Year's Rise Is Attributed to Increased Purchasing Power of Foreign Customers and Greater Industrial Activity in America.

An upward trend in American export trade for the first half of the year is noted in a review of foreign trade figures for that period made public yesterday by the Foreign Commerce Department of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States.

The review attributes three factors as responsible for the betterment in export trade:

The general improvement in business tone and purchasing power of many of America's important foreign customers.

Increased industrial activity in the United States.

Although lower than a year ago, export trade, it is shown in the review, has been generally upward since February, with sharp increases in May and June. This is in contrast to a year ago when the trend was definitely downward.

Second-Quarter Exports.

"Exports for the second quarter of 1933," the chamber reports, "were 3 per cent larger by value than those of the first quarter. Normally there is a seasonal falling off of some 10 per cent. May exports were 11 per cent above April; June, 5 per cent above May. June also registered the first monthly gain over a corresponding month of the preceding year since September, 1929.

"The total value of our exports for the first six months of 1933 amounted to $669,384,000, which was about 20 per cent below the value for the same half of 1932, and 63 per cent under the five-year average. On a value basis, 22 per cent of our 50 chief exports, all manufactured products, were larger in the first half of this year than a year ago, as follows: Lard, coal-tar products, agricultural machinery and implements, aircraft, cured hams and shoulders, rosin, paraffin wax, oil-well and refinery machinery, iron and steel scrap, spirits of turpentine and accounting and calculating machines.

"On a quantity basis, 42 per cent of the exports showed an increase. Out of 99 items, 41 made gains ranging from 0.5 per cent to 1,690 per cent. Most of these signs of increased trade occur in manufactured articles.

List of Exports.

Following is the list: Crude petroleum, lubricating oil, natural gasoline, paraffin wax, boards, planks and scantlings, sawed timber, wood pulp, doors, iron and steel scrap, tubular products, lead pigs, bars, &c., rosin, turpentine, cement, coal-tar pitch, crude coal tar, benzol, carbon black, animal oils and greases, hams and shoulders, lard, starch, corn, barley, oranges, cotton mill waste, passenger automobiles, motor trucks, aircraft, aircraft engines, guns, adding, accounting and calculating machines, radio receiving sets, radio tubes, power pumps, typesetting machines, cameras, unexposed motion picture films, platinum, broad silk, silk hosiery.

"More than one-fifth (21.4 per cent) of our exports by value consisted of unmanufactured cotton, the most dominant position for the first half of a year this leading export has held in the last decade. During the first half of 1933 we exported 1,897,000,000 pounds, which, although 16 per cent smaller than the heavy shipments in the first six months of 1932, exceeded the five-year average by 13 per cent.

"The value of these half-year's exports, $140,697,000, was 13 per cent less than last year and 42 per cent below the five-year average. The average export price was 7.4 cents a pound, as against 7.1 cents in 1932 and 15 cents, the average for the 1928-1932 period.

Autos and Parts.

"Automobiles and parts constituting 6.3 per cent of the total value of exports, advanced over gasoline to second place among our exports, owing to an upturn in the export trade in cars and trucks and a heavy decline in gasoline exports. During the first half of 1933 we exported 33,620 passenger cars, 28 per cent more than in 1932, although 72 per cent under the five-year average exports.

"Exports of trucks totaled 16,325, 32 per cent greater than a year ago and 69 per cent below the five-year average quantity. Automobile tire exports were 15 per cent less than in 1932 and 63.3 per cent below the five-year average quantity.

"One of the heaviest losses in our export trade occurred in the third leading export, gasoline and naphtha, of which we exported 12,943,000 barrels, 37 per cent less than in the half-year of 1932, and 51 per cent below the five-year average for six months. Lubricating oil exports, on the other hand, increased 1 per cent in volume above the six-month figure of 1932, although still 20 per cent smaller than the five-year average. Illuminating oil continued to show a decline, the quantity exported being 30.3 per cent below last year and 55 per cent below the five-year average quantity.

Crude Oil Exports.

"Exports of crude petroleum, however, were 12 per cent greater than a year ago and 36 per cent above the 5-year average volume. Severe decline in our shipments to Canada was more than offset by increased sales to France and Japan.

"Although machinery exports as a whole declined heavily, agricultural machinery and implements registered a slight gain in value, 0.4 per cent, due largely to increased sales of combine and grain harvesters and binders. Electrical machinery and apparatus declined 28 per cent below the 1932 six-month value. Radio receiver exports increased 21 per cent and tubes 37 per cent, but electric household refrigerators declined 2 per cent. The value of oil-well and refinery machinery exports was 10 per cent larger than in 1932, but power driven metal working machinery was down 39 per cent. Adding, accounting and calculating machine exports were 15 per cent greater in quantity compared with the five-year average.

"Exports of refined copper were 23 per cent smaller than for the half-year of 1932 and 66 per cent below the 5-year average quantity. Among the iron and steel items, plates and sheets were 23 per cent smaller in quantity than last year and were 80 per cent below the five-year average. Tubular products, on the other hand, made a gain of 9 per cent above last year, but were 68 per cent below the average quantity. Exports of iron and steel scrap were 207 per cent above the 1932 figure."

Bond Market Moves Higher In Quiet Deals

Growing Anti-Inflationary Sentiment Aids; Sales, $9,140,000.

New York, Oct. 5 (AP).—With anti-inflationary forces apparently drawing further recruits, the bond market again pushed forward today in quiet and orderly trading.

While the volume of transactions was smaller than yesterday, it amounted to $9,140,000, par value. The average for 60 domestic corporate loans advanced four-tenths of a point, the best day's gain in this composite since September 23.

There was little news to inspire a renewal of investment enthusiasm, but the market obviously was cheered by a statement from Senator Joseph T. Robinson, of Arkansas, Democratic leader, upon his return from a European vacation, warning against any drastic inflation of the currency.

Railroad liens, up fractionally to a point or more, included some of Santa Fe, Boston & Maine, Canadian Pacific, Central Pacific, Chesapeake Corporation, Chicago & North Western, Denver & Rio Grande, Erie, M. K. T., New Haven, Norfolk & Western, Northern Pacific, Pennsylvania, Southern Pacific and Southern. St. Paul adjustment 5s, the most active of the carrier group, eased ⅝ of a point.

Utility and industrial gainers of 1 to around 2 points included some bonds of American & Foreign Power, Atlantic Refining, Columbia Gas, Consolidated Coal, International Telephone, National Dairy, Studebaker, United Drug, Vanadium, Warner Bros. and Western Union.

The majority of United States Government securities firmed 1-32d to 8-32d of a point. German government obligations advanced 1 to more than 2 points on buying reported to have come from abroad. French Republic 7½s spurted 3¼ points in the largest turnover of the day and other French issues were up around 1 to 2 points. Bonds of Australia, Japan and Poland also improved.

Wool Market.

Boston, Oct. 5 (A.P.) (U. S. Department of Agriculture).—The wool market generally is rather quiet. Occasional sales of the finer territory wools, however, are being closed at very firm prices. Short French combing 64s and finer territory wools in original bags are becoming more difficult to buy at 77@78 cents scoured basis. Quotations are firm at 81@82 cents scoured basis on good French combing and average strictly combing 64s and finer territory wools in original bags.

Goods Markets.

New York, Oct. 5 (A.P.).—Cotton goods were quiet today with prices in primary trading barely steady. Rayon producers have all the business in hand they can take care of for the next two months. Wool goods are quiet and firm. Silks are being cut up more freely.

Dried Fruits.

New York, Oct. 5 (A.P.).—DRIED FRUITS—Steady, unchanged.

Foreign Markets.

London—Trading on the stock exchange presented a more active appearance today. Transatlantic issues improved on overnight advices from Wall street. Oil shares were also better owing to the increase in the price of American crude oil. Home industrials were generally firmer and gilt-edged securities were supported. German bonds were higher and the closing tone was firm.

Paris—Wall street's upturn, together with the strength in the London market, inspired a general advance, but this was tempered somewhat by the French and American financial uncertainties. The close was steady.

Berlin—Price movements on the boerse were irregular and weaker today.

U. S. Exports Of Automobiles Gain in August

Exports of automotive products from the United States during August were valued at $8,327,485, a gain of $570,939 or 7 per cent over the July total of $7,756,546, and of $2,774,672, or 49 per cent, over that of August, 1932, according to P. R. Mattix of the Commerce Department's Automotive-Aeronautics Division. The August, 1933, total is the highest monthly total recorded for the year thus far, it is pointed out.

Shipments of automotive products have been well maintained during the current year and the August figure represents the first instance since 1928 when exports in that month were higher than those for July.

The rend of overseas trade is further indicated by the fact that the total for the first half of this year was $43,924,274, a decrease of $5,903,069, or 12 per cent as compared with the corresponding period of 1932, while the total for the first eight months of $59,105,236 was but 3 per cent lower than the figure of $61,185,177, for the first eight months of 1932.

Passenger Car Purchases.

Improved foreign purchases of passenger cars and trucks accounted for the record established in August of this year. A comparison of figures for August, 1932, and August, 1933, shows that passenger car exports rose from 2,839, valued at $1,565,469 to 6,447 valued at $3,215,917. In the same period truck shipments increased from 2,035 valued at $883,959 to 3,772 valued at $1,701,508.

August, 1933, exports showed gains over the preceding month of 969 passenger cars valued at $544,674 and 235 trucks, valued at $173,939.

The Union of South Africa and Belgium again represented the two leading markets for American passenger cars, followed by Netherlands, British India and Japan. The three latter countries advanced from fifth, seventh, and ninth positions which they occupied in July through a strengthened demand both in number of units and value. Shipments to the Philippine Islands, Argentina, and Brazil were less than those reported in the preceding month. Switzerland, however, took 183 cars, valued at $110,113, as compared with 95 units, valued at $63,617 in August, 1932, and Morocco accounted for 142 cars, worth $77,553, as against 46, value $31,941 in the corresponding month of last year.

Four Price Classes.

Each of the four price classes in the passenger car group was substantially improved both in number and value, over July of the present year and August, 1932.

Japan was the chief purchaser of American trucks during the month, followed by Spain, British India and Belgium, in the order named. The requirements both of Belgium, which occupied the first position in July, and Spain were reduced from the July figures.

The average unit value for our vehicle exports in August was $498 for passenger cars, and $451 for trucks.

Exports of miscellaneous automotive products amounted to $3,410,060, against $3,557,734 in July, and $3,103,385 in August of last year. Despite the reduced group total as compared with July, exports of replacement parts further improved, being valued at $1,376,050, compared with $1,345,437, and were also above the August, 1932, total of $1,223,454.

August exports of motorcycles amounting to 261 units valued at $56,827, were the highest for any month since March, 1932. Brake lining, shock absorbers, horns, miscellaneous accessories, cycle parts and accessories, and motor boat engines were other automotive items which registered increases in that month.

Bank Clearings of Cities Cut to $4,792,901,000

New York, Oct. 5 (AP).—The total of bank clearings for all leading cities last week was $4,792,901,000, a decrease of 1.1 per cent from the same period last year, Dun & Bradstreet, Inc., reported today. They were, however, $534,998,000 ahead of the previous week.

At New York City the clearings were off 0.4 per cent from last year, while the aggregate for the other centers was 2.6 per cent lower. The decline outside of New York was largely at Boston, Philadelphia and Chicago.

California Steel Sales Improve During Year

San Francisco, Oct. 5 (AP).—The steel industry—basic barometer of many other activities in which its products are used—continued through September at a higher speed than a year ago in the Pacific States.

The building of bridges, highways and dams figures prominently in the month's news of awards of contracts to supply iron and steel for various development projects in the Far West.

Actual sales in the principal iron products lines, as shown in records kept by Don Partridge, associate editor of Steel, showed September business was 15 per cent ahead of the 1932 month.

Aggregate tonnage placed with producing companies during the first nine months of this year is 75 per cent ahead of the same 1932 period.

Partridge's figures showed September sales totaled 18,692 tons for the four major lines—steel bars, shapes and plates, and cast iron pipe. This was comfortably above the 16,192 tons sold in September, 1932.

Woolworth Store Sales Rise to $21,641,558

New York, Oct. 5.—Sales of F. W. Woolworth & Co. for September were $21,641,558, compared with $19,462,786 last year, an increase of slightly more than 11 per cent, according to the Associated Press. For nine months the company reported sales of $170,487,343, compared with $174,100,859, a decrease of 2.1 per cent.

Industry of Building Homes Gives Promise of Upswing

New York, Oct. 5 (AP).—The major industry of building homes, has shown a faint quiver in recent months which some analysts say may well blossom into a full-fledged upswing by early next year.

Residential quarters constructed in 1932 represented little more than 60,000 family units, and this year's volume will about approximate that. This is in contrast with an estimated annual requirement of about 225,000 units, according to a survey by the Fitch Publishing Co.

This deficiency has been met by "doubling up" of families, and in migration from urban to rural areas, but business analysts feel that any steady increase in employment, such as has been witnessed in recent months, may quickly result in a brisk demand for homes once more.

Residential building began to slacken as far back as the latter part of 1928, and even in 1929, when other lines were booming there was much discussion of means to make credit cheaper to stimulate building. As the situation grew worse, this finally gave way to plans of helping the owners of homes already built from losing their property through inability to manage their mortgages.

With liquid capital piling up in banks and earning very low rates of interest, and mortgages based upon present lowered building costs and deflated values considered good risks, it is felt that the prospective home builder should soon have little difficulty in financing. Money for speculative large scale building projects, however, may be slower in appearing.

New York Central Line Loadings Rise in Week

New York, Oct. 5.—According to information received by the Associated Press, freight loadings on the New York Central lines last week totaled 100,972 cars, an increase of 7.4 per cent over 1932. Traffic in the previous week amounted to 98,048 cars, which was a gain of 7.4 per cent over last year.

Pennsylvania Railroad System's loadings last week aggregated 93,788 cars against 94,338 a week ago and 88,702 a year ago.

Interest Increased On Grain Concern

(Associated Press.)

Interest rates to the Farmers National Grain Corporation, Chicago, will be boosted from one-eighth of 1 per cent to 4½ per cent under a refinancing agreement announced yesterday by the Farm Credit Administration.

The new policy applies to loans of $15,312,000 made by the old Farm Board, whose functions have been assumed by the Credit Administration. The Farmers National no longer will be permitted to reloan funds on elevator properties of its members and its operators will be kept under observation by a representative of Gov. Henry Morgenthau, jr., of the administration.

Morgenthau said operating costs of the Farmers National had been reduced more than $2,000,000, and this effort had included salary reductions. The salary of George S. Milnor, general manager, has been reduced from $50,000 a year to $30,000, Morgenthau said.

Trade Activity Cut 1.2 Points In Past Week

New York, Oct. 5.—Continuing the decline of the past two months, the Business Activity Barometer, compiled by Dun & Bradstreet, Inc., shows a further drop of 1.2 points from the preceding week and now stands at approximately the same level registered during the week of June 21. The index for the September 27 week stands at 62.6 per cent of the 1928-1930 average and compares with 63.8 for the previous week and 51.4 for the corresponding week of 1932. The latest barometer still shows a fair-sized increase (41.6 per cent) over the March low, despite the gradual decline since the peak of August 2.

The Dun & Bradstreet Business Activity Barometer for the past few weeks follows (1928-1930 equals 100):

Peanut Men Asked To Boost Prices

Norfolk, Va., Oct. 5 (A.P.).—Shellers and cleaners of peanuts throughout this section of the State today received letters from George N. Peek, administrator of the agricultural adjustment administration, asking them immediately to put into effect a minimum price of $60 a ton for farmers' stock Spanish peanuts and $55 per ton for number one farmers' stock runners, with comparable prices for other varities and grades.

Peanut prices in recent years, the administrator wrote, have been at a disastrously low level and prices recently declined sharply "about which the agricultural adjustment administration is determined to take some action."

The request from the administrator, which also went to shellers and cleaners throughout all the peanut producing area of the South, asks for voluntary cooperation from the purchasers of peanuts for the present, but hints at drastic action if this cooperation is not forthcoming immediately.

The appointee, who has had large experience in the purchase and operation of Tygarts Valley coal, timber and farm lands, will resign his position in the conservation corps upon the receipt of orders assigning him to his new duties.

Railroads Net 1.72 Per Cent On Investments

Operating Income Mounts to $277,666,122 for First 8 Months.

Class 1 railroads of the United States for the first eight months of 1933 had a net railway operating income of $277,666,122, which was at the annual rate of return of 1.72 per cent on their property investment, according to reports just filed by the carriers with the Bureau of Railway Economics and made public yesterday. In the first eight months of 1932, their net railway operating income was $148,885,399 or .92 per cent on their property investment.

Property investment is the value of road and equipment as shown by the books of the railways, including materials, supplies and cash. The net railway operating income is what is left after the payment of operating expenses, taxes and equipment rentals but before interest and other fixed charges are paid.

This compilation as to earnings for the first eight months of 1933 is based on reports from 149 class 1 railroads representing a total of 241,062 miles.

Gross Operating Revenues.

Gross operating revenues for the first eight months of 1933 totaled $2,005,952,192 compared with $2,068,090,684 for the same period in 1932, a decrease of 3 per cent.

Operating expenses for the first eight months of 1933 amounted to $1,466,302,314 compared with $1,644,345,288 for the same period in 1932, a decrease of 10.8 per cent.

Wheat Loses As Corn Drops To Low Level

Liquidating Move Slashes Feed Grain Prices; Provisions Decline.

Chicago, Oct. 5 (AP).—Acute weakness developed in the corn market today and tumbled prices down to the lowest level corn has reached since last May.

A pertinacious liquidating movement on the part of distressed holders of December corn contracts was much in evidence, with December corn quotations falling 2¼ cents a bushel to hardly more than half the price of December wheat.

The liquidating movement in corn extended to every kind of grain, and was associated to a considerable degree with absence of any definite new developments regarding the monetary policy of the administration at Washington.

Corn Closes Shaky.

Corn closed shaky at the day's bottom level, 1⅞ to 2¼ cents under yesterday's finish; wheat, 1⅝ to 1¾ down; oats, 1½ to 1⅞ off, and provisions varying from 20 cents decline to a rise of 7 cents.

It was in vain friends of higher prices called attention to the fact that corn was selling at figures which meant less than a cent a pound, and which showed a drop of about 32 cents a bushel in the last three months. Urgency of distressed owners continued, and the corn market went to within less than 6 cents of the season's bottom price record.

Vessel charters were made today for 610,000 bushels of corn to be moved from Chicago to Buffalo, but uncertainty prevailed as to how much of these and other recent chartierings were for winter storage and how much were going into consumer use. Oats followed corn.

Wheat Under Pressure.

Wheat, although displaying relatively less weakness than corn, was under almost constant selling pressure and developed no vigorous power to recover.

Something of a steadying factor to wheat was a report that concentrated holdings of wheat in Winnipeg had been transferred from near-by to distant deliveries, elevator interests taking October contracts and giving distant deliveries at exchange. On the other hand, a disturbing influence in Chicago was attention given to reports of Washington plans for taxing nearly all essential articles of food and clothing to help finance Federal relief measures the coming winter.

Manufacturer Reports NRA Aids Business

New York, Oct 5.—Business improvement under the NRA was reported by Thomas J. Watson, president of International Business Machines Corporation, in a statement made last night before sailing on the S. S. Bremen to attend the Council meeting of the International Chamber of Commerce in Paris on October 13. Mr. Watson is chairman of the American committee of the chamber.

Approximately 900 employes have been added to the American organization of International Business Machines Corporation since putting into effect the provisions of the NRA, Mr. Watson stated. More than $20,000 a week has been added to pay rolls at the company's main plant at Endicott, N. Y., making an additional expenditure in the Endicott-Binghamton district of $1,000,000 a year, he added.

The company will have expended more than $1,200,000 under its modernization program when the new buildings and equipment now under construction are completed, Mr. Watson continued. Of this amount, more than $750,000 will be represented by new engineering, factory and school buildings at Endicott.

Mr. Watson was accompanied by Mrs. Watson. Also in his party were Eugene F. Hartley, statistician of the company, and Mrs. Hartley and J. P. Gregg, of Washington, D. C., manager of the American committee of the International Chamber of Commerce, and Mrs. Gregg.

Mr. Watson will be joined in Paris by J. D. Mooney, president of General Motors Export Corporation; F. E. Powell, president of the American Chamber of Commerce in London, and N. D. Jay, of Morgan & Co., Paris, and other members of the American committee and delegates to the council meeting. Representatives of 40 nations will attend the meeting to consider, among other matters, the removal of foreign exchange controls and other restrictions on international trade.

Prize Assignment Awaits Decision—Ball Players "Go Theater"—"Special" Filmed

Three in Tilt For Lead With Mons. Maurice

Crawford, MacDonald and Moore Compete; Earle Week-End Schedules.

One of the most coveted assignments of the year—that of the feminine role of Sonia, opposite Maurice Chevalier in "The Merry Widow," to be refilmed by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer—will be awarded to some star between now and January 1. The considerable scramble that was precipitated a few weeks ago by the announcement that this plum would fall into the lap of some romantic songstress now has resolved itself into a three-cornered contest among Joan Crawford, Jeanette MacDonald and Grace Moore.

The final choice will hinge in large measure upon what obligations other assignements impose upon them about three months from now when the picture is due to go into production.

Chevalier at present is enjoying one of his extended vacations away from Hollywood, but when he returns, around the first of the year, it will be necessary that all casting arrangements shall have been made for the early completion of the Lehar operetta, in which Mae Murray achieved one of her most notable successes on the silent screen.

What They're Doing.

Joan Crawford has recently completed a new part in "Dancing Lady," a picture with a musical background. Jeanette MacDonald is being costarred with Ramon Novarro in Jerome Kern's delightful operetta of "The Cat and the Fiddle," and Miss Moore, who last season appeared on Broadway in "Mme. DuBarry," has since been engaged in operatic, concert and radio work.

Miss Moore, of course, will be remembered, by Washingtonians particularly, for her appearances in "The New Moon," with Lawrence Tibbett, and "A Lady's Morals," in which she impersonated the Swedish nightingale, Jenny Lind.

The role of Sonia being what it is, the choice of this department would be—but perhaps you would prefer to guess!! !

Having met with eminent success in the experiment last night, Jimmie Lake, impresario of the Gayety Theater's burleycue productions, announces another midnight show will be given at his Temple of the (a)Muses tonight for the special entertainment of the world series amusement seekers who may be shopping up and down Ninth street. The abundant and pulchritudinous Miss Jerri McCauley is the guest star of the week, to be followed on the Sabbath by Ann Corio and her "Girls in Blue."

Not On the Program.

Speaking of world series amusement seekers, those who attended the last performance at Loew's Fox last night were regaled by one of those impromptu and unprogrammed innovations that add zest to any entertainment.

Discovering Al Schacht, comedian-coach of the National's comfortably ensconced in a front-row orchestra chair, Phil Lampkin proclaimed the fact to the audience with the statement that he had understood Al was a musician and so was going to invite him to mount the conductor's rostrum and direct the orchestra.

This Mr. Schacht did with such eclat, elan and what have you, that of his own volition he confided to the assembled gentry that he also tooted a mean trumpet and proved it by executing "When Irish Eyes Are Smiling"—of all things!—with a very elegant flourish and only a few cracked notes. His reception was so flattering that he expressed the intention of repeating the performance tonight at approximately the same hour, whatever that was, exactly.

Bill Robinson Dances.

Another notable who was down to see the Nationals win their first game of the series yesterday was Bill Robinson, the ne plus ultra hoofer. Bill was espied standing just offstage in the wings, "in one," by Mr. Schacht and in time was coaxed out on the stage. After a little smartcracking with Mr. Schacht, who, incidentally, is by way of being a bit of a showman on his own account, Bill tore into one of his incomparable tap dances and had so much fun that he, too, says he is coming back for more of the same tonight.

And that wasn't all. Clapping his good eye on Jimmy Foxx, first baseman of the Philadelphia Athletics, hiding out front, Schacht, assisted by the Messrs. Lampkin and Robinson, managed to wheedle him also onto the stage, where he acknowledged a round of applause—since he is no longer opposition—and expressed the hope that the home-town boys would cop the bunting.

A pleasant time was had, &c.

It is perhaps just as well that Panjandrum Stephen E. Cochran of the good Col. Rapley's National Theater did not adhere with too rigid insistence to the ballyhoo that was once instituted for Pola Negri in "A Trip to Pressburg," as next week's attraction on E street. Miss Negri landed in New York yesterday and hopes in course of time to begin rehearsals in the play that will mark her American debut upon the legitimate stage and was supposed to have opened here next Monday! Miss Negri confided to the ladies and gentlemen of the down covering the waterfront that she has heard of Harold F. McCormick, but won't know whether she is to marry him until some time after next May! So if you hear definitely, please let her know.

For the Patron's Pleasure.

With the new fall season well under way and a consistent bulge in week-end attendance apparently the permanent order of the day, the Earle Theater announces that beginning tomorrow, Saturday, October 7, there will be five de luxe performances every Saturday, with doors opening at 10:15 a. m., and stage shows at approximately the hours of 11:45 a. m., 2:10, 4:15, 6:45 and 9 p. m.

Effective Sunday and continuing until further notice, four de luxe performances will be given at the Earle every Sunday, with doors opening at 1:30 p. m. and vaudeville going on at approximately 2:10, 4:15, 6:45 and 9 p. m.

This change in week-end schedules has been prompted entirely by the management's anxiety to afford all prospective patrons a reasonable opportunity to secure seats without long standing waits in the lobby or foyer of the theater.

The playing members of the Washington Nationals and the New York Giants, who have transferred their world series brawl from Coogan's Bluff to Seventh street and Florida avenue, were guests of Lenore Ulric and the management of the National Theater at last evening's performance of "Her Man of Wax," the new Julian Thompson comedy that had its premiere Monday night. It is safe to say that all of the boys envied Napoleon—especially in the second act! It is also comparatively safe to say that in the wax figures in the Musee Grevin the Nationals saw themselves as they looked to the customers while facing Mr. Hubbell's justly celebrated screw ball—and the Giants themselves when confronted by Mr. Whitehill!

"Special" Soon Ready.

After more than four months of intensive filming, the last scene of "Only Yesterday," Universal's American "Cavalcade" was completed this week at Universal City, Calif., under the direction of John M. Stahl. Allowing a month for cutting and editing, the picture will be ready for release on Broadway some time around November 6. It is one of Universal's big pictures of the year.

"Only Yesterday" is unique in recent motion picture history in more than one respect. It has a cast of 90 well-known screen names as featured players, and the number of extras used in the various mob scenes totals 4,500.

More than six months were consumed in the selection of the cast, headed by Margaret Sullavan, John Boles, Billie Burke and Reginald Denny.

Based on Frederick Lewis Allen's widely acclaimed story of the same name, "Only Yesterday" presents as a background for its dramatic love story a screen record of important events in American life from the Great War to the stock market crash in 1929. This is the film it was hoped would be ready in time to reopen the Rialto.

John Barrymore, who comes to the Palace screen today as one of a company of notable players in "Night Flight," has completed work in the title role of Elmer Rice's stage play, "Counsellor at Law," as translated into terms of the cinema for Universal, and declares it the best role he has ever undertaken before the cameras and microphones. Bebe Daniels and Doris Kenyon share with Onslow Stevens the other principal roles in the production. Except that both are exceptionally competent actors, one does not immediately associate in mind Paul Muni, who played the part on the stage, and the younger Barrymore. But Papa Laemmle probably knows best.

Very good, lads, now all you have to do is win three more like that in a row. Simplicity itself. All that is necessary is get more runs than the other fellows—and then sit down with the little woman and count all that dough!

Will She Be His Leading Lady for Life?

Charlie Chaplin's business manager, Alfred Reeves, has said that he expects to see his boss and Paulette Goddard, screen actress, pictured above become man and wife some time late next year. Paulette, who would be Charlie's third wife, at least will be his leading woman in his next picture, tentatively scheduled to go into production in December.

Renee Adoree, Film Star, Dies

Heroine of "Big Parade" Loses Three-Year Fight for Life.

Hollywood, Oct. 5 (AP).—Renee Adoree, French actress, died today of a chronic respiratory ailment that ended her film career three years ago. She was born in Lille, France, in a circus tent 31 years ago.

As capable in dancing as on a circus trapeze, or when riding bareback under the big top, Miss Adoree came to America shortly after the war and began a film career with the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios. Her greatest picture was "The Big Parade."

It was while playing in support of Ramon Novarro in "Call of the Flesh," that the actress fell prey to the malady that caused her to be taken to a desert resort in Prescott, Ariz.

Miss Adoree appeared in "The Cossacks," "La Boheme," "The Exquisite Sinner," "Mr. Wu," "The Pagan," "The Tide of Empire," and "Redemption."

Marie Dressler to Be Guest At White House Tonight

Actress Missed President Here, But First Lady Stops Her Moans.

Marie Dressler, famous screen star, who began her career at Coney Island, has accepted an invitation to spend tonight at the White House as the guest of President and Mrs. Roosevelt.

The buxom Marie, when she happened to meet Mrs. Roosevelt in New York this week confided to her she was broken-hearted because she had not seen the President.

"I traveled clear across the continent, to Washington," she moaned, "and then found he had gone to Hyde Park."

Mrs. Roosevelt hastened to issue an invitation to the actress to come to the White House the first night she and the President returned.

Nearly Ruined Her Voice.

Marie, for all her cinema success today, has not had a royal road to this success. She began as a concessionaire at Coney Island, where she almost ruined her voice. Then she was lucky enough to get a few light roles.

When it was discovered she had talent for comedy she got a few parts doing rather broad bits. She went along from bit to bit, none of them good, certainly none of them bringing her either fame or money. She played the role of Flo Honeydew in "The Lady Slavey," starred in "Miss Prinnt," and finally, in 1906, joined Weber and Fields.

Success, however, awaited her in the silent movies. Her "Tillie's Punctured Romance" was a classic of the slapstick era. There was nothing delicate in any of her early pictures. People of refinement usually made a point of staying away, protesting she was a bit too broad in her interpretations.

Develops New Style.

In recent years, however, she developed into a tragicomedienne of unusual ability. With the change in popular taste Marie has developed a restrained comedy style, and foregone the slapstick variety that marked her contemporary career with Charlie Chaplin.

One of her greatest movie successes was "Emma," the story of a nurse-housemaid who married her wealthy master, found the evils of money and high society little to her liking, and, as an old woman returned to her profession of nurse-housemaid, content to be back to the simple life?

MARIE DRESSLER.

Weaver's Curve Hope of Nats Against Hubbell's Screw-Ball Today

Nats Pepped By Support Of Fans

Victory Puts Team Very Much Back in Running for Title.

Fans Amply Rewarded; Babe Ruth Rooter for Whitehill.

By Frank Getty.

THAT'S what our Nationals needed!

A little of the old hometown peppery patter ringing in their ears, the presence of the President of the United States and 25,726 fellow townsmen, and even a pet pigeon pecking away unconcernedly in the infield throughout the game.

With such support, who could lose? Not this fighting Washington ball club, back once more on its home lot, and very much back in the running for the 1933 world's championship by virtue of a well-earned 4-to-0 victory over the New York Giants yesterday.

From the first put-out, when "Goose" Goslin bowed gracefully against a right-field box to snare Joe Moore's sky-scraping foul, until the last, when Heinie Manush camped happily beneath Gus Mancuso's long fly, the Washington fans rooted loyally and vociferously, exhorting the Nats to a decisive triumph.

Confidence Backs Cheering.

A gray sky, which loosed a chilling shower upon Griffith Stadium shortly before game time, and a cold, raw wind from the North, kept down the attendance, but those fans who filled the grandstand, jammed the little triangle of center field bleachers and dotted the pavilion seats in left field were regally rewarded for their attendance.

They had a chance to cheer, and cheer with perfect confidence, from start to finish. They sat in bright sunshine after the dreary drizzle, and watched the Nationals come back after two well-nigh disheartening defeats to bring the world series count to two games to one—still in New York's favor, but a much more hopeful count than the one of 2 to 0 inflicted by the Giants' victories at the Polo Grounds.

In contrast to the hostile rooting dinned into the Nats' unhappy ears at New York, Joe Cronin and his team-mates heard a wild halloo of encouragement with every winning move they made.

Presidential Inspiration.

Then there was the inspiration of President Roosevelt's presence, undoubtedly no small factor in bringing out the best baseball of which the Nationals were capable—a brand of winning ball which many of us now think will enable them to go right on, pass the Giants, and win the world's championship.

While as for that persistent pigeon, who just wouldn't be chased out of the playing field, flitting impudent tail feathers at Umpire-in-chief Pfirman, if that bird wasn't the "Blue Eagle" of good omen for the American League champions, Washington fans don't know our good omens when we see one.

High up above the grandstand, in the little pine press box, Babe Ruth, who has played the hero role in so many world series himself, chuckled at the vain efforts of the umpires and players to drive the pigeon out of the infield.

"There's one bird those umps can't run out of the game," laughed the Babe. "They'd have me in the shower bath by this time, if I ever told them what that pigeon's telling 'em."

Ruth Cheers Whitehill.

The Babe, incidentally, was rooting as hard as the most ardent Washington fan for the game's outstanding hero—Earl Whitehill. Ruth, it seems, selected the Nats' able left-hander for an all-star baseball team of 1933, and so was up their pulling for Earl to justify his choice.

How ably Whitehill did so, how he kept Washington hopes high and hearts happy by shutting out the Giants for nine consecutive innings, is the story of the ball game.

The very soul of the national pastime is on display when a home team wins, and we were pretty close to the real thing out at Griffith Stadium yesterday afternoon.

Shortly after noon, of course, it looked as though there would be no ball game at all. This meant much to the Washington Club, for it might have meant facing Carl Hubbell, the Giants' southpaw pitching ace, in the third game of the series. It would have meant a deal of unnecessary discomfort to the thousands who arrived early to watch all the picturesque preliminaries with which a world series contest is adorned.

Early Wind and Rain.

A chill blast from the north, bringing scurrying rain clouds, made Griffith Stadium a bleak and damply unpleasant place to be for an hour or so before game time. The early arrivals first used newspapers as shields for their shins, against the cold, raw wind, and then as improvised umbrellas as a steady drizzle set in.

For half an hour before the game began, the rain fell, sending many of those in the uncovered sections of the stands to seek shelter elsewhere. The infield was covered with the customary tarpaulin, and old Judge Kenesaw Mountain Landis, upon whose stooped shoulders rested the responsibility for calling

Cronin's Cheer Before Game Saved Day

Pep Talk to Glum Players Restored Their Spirits to Fighting Edge.

By Frank H. Young.

HOLDING meetings before important games or important series long has been a quaint custom of the trade in baseball. But there are meetings and meetings, and the results of the one held in the Nats' locker room before yesterday's third and highly important game qualify Manager Joe Cronin for the "D. P." (Doctor of Psychology) degree.

Coming back on the train from New York after having absorbed two successive lickings, every member of the Washington entourage was as low in spirits as are the nether regions. Things looked dark, mighty dark, and the Nats were distinctly up against it. A loss of yesterday would have meant that their only chance of winning the world title would be by winning four games in a row. And four games in a row is quite an accomplishment—and doubly hard when the fellow you have to beat four games in a row has taken three in a row himself.

That's what the Nats were thinking about when they reported at Griffith Stadium yesterday, and that's what Manager Joe Cronin had to get out of 24 heads, including his rookies, in one short 15-minute meeting before the game. How well Joe did the job, judging from the 4-to-0 victory turned in, is now known throughout the whole baseball world.

Never Will Give Up.

Indeed, Cronin's job was a masterpiece. A fighting Irishman himself, he never for a minute considered ultimate defeat in the series. His team had been in tight spots before and had fought its way out and it could do so again, he felt. And that's what he sold to every

Davis Trial Halted, Score Announced

New York, Oct. 5 (AP).—The judicial austerity of Federal court cracked a bit today. The Giants, alas, were losing.

Testimony was proceeding on the trial of Senator James J. Davis, of Pennsylvania, on lottery charges. Legal rapiers flashed in approved fashion. Suddenly Judge Johnson Hayes interrupted:

"Off the record, if any of you are wondering if the Giants are winning, they're not."

President Like A Youngster At Game

Applauds Plays, Follows Them Without Use of Scorecard.

By Bill McCormick.

FRANKLIN DELANO ROOSEVELT arrived at the ball park yesterday flanked by gold braid and ceremony—the President. After the usual formal handshakes, the inevitable posing for photographers, the inescapable throwing out of the first ball, he settled back in his chair, lighted a cigarette and became Frank Roosevelt—baseball fan.

No small-boy spectator seemed to enjoy himself more than the No. 1 man of the United States Government. And no rabid regular follower of the national pastime seemed more familiar with the game.

Right off the bat, Baseball Fan Roosevelt refused the official programs and line-ups that were passed to him. Members of the Presidential party expressed by facial expressions, discreet, very discreet dubiousness over the ability of the Chief Executive to disprove an old adage by "telling the players without a scorecard." But he did it.

Whisper it lightly, but the President's sympathies seemed to lie

Through Parisian Eyes

Young Frenchman Pens Impressions Of His First Ball Game

By Andre Vulliet.

(Editor's note: Mr. Vulliet is a young Frenchman who yesterday paid his first visit to that great American institution, the ball park.)

AT last I have seen my first baseball game. It seems funny that I should report on it. They tell me that the stadium was filled with some 40,000 people who watched the game, and I think I was probably the only one who could not tell the difference between a foul and a home run. Yet I have to tell the 39,999 others what my impressions are.

I landed in New York a week ago, having never been in this country, and thinking that gold dollars was the most valuable thing to own, but soon I realized that it was a ticket for a World Series game. I also realized that every one seemed to be more preoccupied by the game than by the Disarmament Conference or by the Inflation Policy.

Baseball is certainly not a one-class sport. We do not have that in France. Each of the sports we do will be witnessed by a certain public of fans. But these fans may well be categorized. The two sports which probably draw the largest crowds at home are Rugger (a sort of football) and cycling. But the first one will stir the enthusiasm of the youths only, whereas the latter will be feverishly attended by the mass.

Too Many Against One.

Baseball, I thought, must be the sport of the sports and I, therefore, expected the thrill that comes once in a lifetime.

I got to the stadium much ahead of time in order to get my enthusiasm well warmed up for the start of the play. I noticed that my neighbor looked exactly like one of our "connaisseurs," one of these "sportsmen" who know and read so much about sports that they have no time left to engage in any. He was fat, vulgar, good humoured. He was chewing and his hat was right on the back of his head. "Looks like home" thought I. Believe me, he knew everything about baseball. He could even tell the winner, and he let everybody know it. As I did not want him to think that I was unfamiliar with the game I decided to show off the only technical term I know, that is to say "Babe Ruth" or rather "Babe." For you must

President of Cubs Dead in Chicago

Chicago, Oct. 5 (AP).—William Veeck, president of the Chicago Cubs, died at 7:45 a. m. (C. S. T.) today at St. Luke's Hospital, where he had been suffering from leucemia, an excess of white corpucles in the blood.

Veeck entered the hospital several days ago and his condition was considered critical from the start. Oxygen was administered yesterday when his difficulty in breathing caused his heart to be taxed and his temperature to rise.

Only Nat Win Will Save Scalpers

Victory Today to Boost Saturday Prices, Meeting Loss.

NOWHERE in Washington will the prayers be louder for the Nats to cop the fourth game of the series today than among the horde of ticket speculators who descended upon the Capital from Broadway. The scalpers' hopes will ride with the Nats, not because of any sentimental attachment, but as a matter of self-preservation.

The Washington public has outsmarted the "wise guy" speculators from the big town, who, basing their hopes on our reactions to the 1924 series, set their sights on a price of from $50 to $60 for a strip of three tickets. So far, the speculators have taken an awful shellacking. Up until game time yesterday, good seats were available at the stadium box office—so the public neglected the ticket broker shamefully. Some of them sold single-game tickets stamped at $5.50, for $1, but most of them took the full loss.

Now, there is only one salvation for the speculators. If the Nats win today's game, seats for Saturday will undoubtedly be at a premium. A heavy Saturday sale, and only a heavy Saturday sale, can pull the "scalpers" out of the hole. So, one and all, the ticket brokers have their fingers crossed, are knocking on wood, putting curses on the Giants and doing everything possible to boost the Nats into the win column again today.

Players' Wives Best Dressed At Victory

Orchids and Mink Coats Abound; Sentimentality Also in Evidence.

By Esther Van Sciver.

WOMEN take their sentimentality with them even to baseball games. A murmur ran through the grand stand at the beginning of the sixth inning. A bold gray pigeon wheeled down into the right infield and held up the game. From box seat to bleacher, the ladies opined "Isn't he cute?"

Impatient men muttered mild profanity.

The bird had a dove-of-peace air. He caused the boys in the business to forget their rivalry and join forces for a moment. A handful of dirt from one of the Nationals' best pitching arms flew pigeonward. Amid much shooing and flapping from the boys, the bird strutted disdainfully across the diamond. He remained through the game, picking at the soil on the sidelines.

The best-dressed women at the game were the players' wives. Orchids adorned more than one mink coat. Gardenias glistened against Hudson seal. But tired lines still showed in pretty faces and shoulders drooped a bit under the fur.

That renowned careful carelessness was markedly apparent in the costumes of most of the fair fans. smart tweeds and knitted things, hats with a jaunty air and scarves in vivid colors were worn with considerable effectiveness.

A mother in brilliant red suede and her daughter in somber brown tweed hurried from the game in the last inning. They hung for half an hour over the lines that cut off a path for the President's open car.

"I think he's wonderful," said mother to daughter.

"Yeah," said daughter.

Small children distracted the attention of their parents from the game. One mother solved the problem neatly by purchasing several packages of popcorn. Both mother and child kept their eyes glued on the ball field. But mother's right hand delved with regularity into the bag and pushed popcorn into

Team's Fate In Capable Hands

'Brain Truster' Believed Man Best Equipped to Beat Enemy.

Win, After Yesterday's 4-0 Victory, Would Even Series.

CARL HUBBELL vs. Monte Weaver.

That's the pitching program for the fourth game of the world series today at Griffith Stadium, where the Nats and Giants resume their struggle as the Capital plays host again to baseball's piece de resistance after thrilling to the Nats' 4-to-0 triumph yesterday.

In the erudite hands of Prof. Weaver, "brain truster" of the Washington pitching staff, has been placed the fate of the Nats today by Manager Joe Cronin. No hesitancy did he display in nominating the sophomore of the Nats' mound corps to oppose the great Hubbell. And with reason, for of all the Washington pitchers Weaver was the most consistently effective in the waning months of the season.

Are On Trial Again.

Again today the Nats are on trial as a hitting ball club. Fresh in their memory is the five-hit performance of the Giants' screw-ball artist in the opening game of the Polo Grounds when they were as helpless as babes in arms before the eccentric shoots of Hubbell.

A series of endless turning points, apparently, is this world series of 1933, for today again the Nats face a critical game. Victory for them will even the series. Defeat will give the Giants an almost overwhelming 3-to-1 edge. Thus it behooves the Nats to bestir themselves against Hubbell.

In Monte Weaver Cronin has made a choice who is calculated to offer to Hubbell the sternest opposition. When "right," Weaver, like Hubbell, is well-nigh invincible. And, unlike Hubbell, he has had weeks of rest for today's effort.

Curve vs. Screwball.

It will be the fast curve versus the screwball, for it is the fireball with the dip and the sweep that is Weaver's chief stock in trade.

Good pitching stopped the Giants yesterday. But they demonstrated in those first two games that the pitching must be good, for they will murder anything less, as is attested by the failures of Crowder and Stewart.

Washington will be glimpsing the talented Hubbell for the first time. No single pitcher in a world series ever had erected about him such an aura of invincibility in the pre-series discussion. And Hubbell substantiated all that had been proclaimed for him, and more, in that first game at the Polo Grounds.

Swinging Futilely.

Against Hubbell in New York, the bulk of the Nats were swinging futilely. Myer, Manush, Goslin and Cronin, the punch of the batting order, were slapping when they swung. Only Fred Schulte was taking his regular cut at the ball.

Hubbell did not use his screwball throughout, intermixing his famed asset with a fast curve that dipped low. Washington hitters were nonplused, outguessed as the Giants' talented mound star crossed them up.

The fog lifted a bit for the Nats' pitching staff when Jack Russell was observed warming up in the bull pen in the late innings yesterday. Struck on the wrist by a batted ball in the first game, Russell, the Nats' No. 1 relief man, was painfully injured. Today, again he will be available.

Once-Overs on Series

By H. I. Phillips.

President Roosevelt at last took a hand in the situation yesterday and put the battered, ragged and distracted Nats in a liquid position.

* * * *

He had part of the brain trust, representatives of the Army and Navy, and part of the Cabinet with him and it took them all to get the recovery under way.

* * * *

Clark Griffith was the forgotten man Wednesday but he got the New Deal yesterday.

* * * *

The Nats realize that while business is better they have a long pull ahead of them. But that's sumpin.

* * * *

They are now operating under a new code guaranteeing them the right of collective bludgeoning; in fact, Washington had a pronounced feeling last night that with the aid and comfort of the administration the Giants would be plowed under.

* * * *

That the Giants were "cracked down on" there is no doubt. Just as he closed the banks in March, President Roosevelt closed Stoneham, Terry & Ott, Inc., yesterday.

* * * *

* * * *

Mr. Roosevelt had that old "My friends and neighbors" expression as he wound up to pitch the first ball to the cheers of the multitude, and when he pulls that old personality stuff it is poison for any opposition.

* * * *

Washington was an inspired team from that moment on, and the visitors acted like visiting chiselers afraid that they would forfeit their Blue Eagle if they didn't do what they were told.

* * * *

It was Whitehill against Fitzsimmons, and Fitzsimmons was practically pitching not only against a ball team but against an administration.

* * * *

It seemed to make him jittery, but the Giants decided to submit only one pitcher to intimidation, and he was still in there at the close doing his best, but deploring the vicissitudes of fate and democracy.

The Giants had their chances yesterday, especially in the eighth, but they acted like a lot of Republican rugged individualists at a conference with Gen. Johnson.

* * * *

It was great weather for geese, which may account for the work of the Goose.

* * * *

For a time it looked as if no game would be played, and Judge Landis spent the forenoon putting on his famous act, "Is it raining or raining?"

* * * *

Standing in a puddle, with water streaming down his neck, he decided that it was an optical illusion.

* * * *

It cleared for a time just at game time, but conditions were far from comfortable either for players or fans.

* * * *

* * * *

Whitehill pitched a nice game and and for the most part had the Giants going out faster than Prof. Moley out of an economic conference.

* * * *

The administration now thinks it had definitely launched its drive to restore Washington to the 1924 world series level.

* * * *

But the Giants still have Hubbell, who may go in there today.

* * * *

If he does it may take a second Presidential visit. And definite intervention.

Play by Play of Game

FIRST INNING.

Giants—Moore lifted a short fly that Goslin caught just inside foul territory as he bounced against a field box. Critz bounced to Bluege and was thrown out at first. Terry hit the first ball pitched to Myer and was an easy out at first. No runs, no hits, no errors, none left.

Nats—Myer poked a single through the infield to left. Goslin hit the first ball pitched against the right field fence for a two bagger. Myer going to third. Manush flied out to Ryan, who took the ball in short left field. Cronin bounced to Fitzsimmons, who made the putout at first base while Myer scored and Goslin went to third. Fitz made a difficult stop, but dropped the ball and was unable to make a play at the plate. Schulte hit to right, which went for two bases when the Nats outfielder beat Ott's throw to Ryan on a close play, Goslin scoring. Kuhel bounced to Jackson and Schulte was run down between second and third base, Jackson to Critz. Two runs, three hits, no errors, one left.

SECOND INNING.

Giants—Ott drove the first ball pitched to deep left field, where Manush made a sensational running catch close to the foul line. Davis cracked a single past Bluege. Jackson Davis went to second on a wild pitch. Jackson walked. Mancuso hit to Cronin, and the Senators engineered a double-play that ended the inning, Cronin to Myer to Kuhel. No runs, one hit, no errors, one left.

Nats—Bluege doubled down the left-field foul line. Sewell bounced to Critz and was tossed out at first, Bluege taking third. Whitehill grounded to Fitzsimmons, whose throw to Jackson failed to catch Bluege as the latter slid back into the bag. It was a fielder's choice, and Whitehill reached first. Myer—Bluege scored on Myer's double along the first baseline. Whitehill pulled up at third base. Goslin lifted a high fly to Moore, and Whitehill was thrown out at the plate on a fine throw to Mancuso.

Nats Got Three Lucky Breaks in Game, but Won by Their Stellar Playing

Last Brought Final Run To Griffs

Locals Hope Chance Will Smile Again Today When Needed.

Skill Added to Little Good Fortune Caused One-Sided Score.

LADY LUCK, that fickle old gal who seems to have no "steady," yesterday cast her smiles on the Nats, and, oddly enough, just at a time when they did not need them.

With Earl Whitehill, the dapper, little southpaw, pitching shutout ball, good, straight-away hitting gave the Washington Club enough runs to win and Manager Joe Cronin and his boys are hoping that the fickle dame will remember the old saw, "A friend in need is a friend indeed," and favor them again when they need a little outside help in the form of breaks.

There were but three major ones yesterday and the natives benefited from all of them. In the very first inning, a break of luck gave the Nats their first run. Myer had opened with a single and had been propelled to third by Goslin's double. This brought Cronin up and he topped one down third base way. Quick as a flash, Pitcher Fitzsimmons was after the ball, but he slipped as he picked it up. He made the kiling at first on a good play, but, because of the skidding, had to pass up the play on Myer at the plate.

Sphere Barely Nabbed.

As things turned out, this one run was enough to give the Nats the decision, but they combined skill with luck to benefit in the fourth, when a great play by Myer prevented the Giants from scoring. The break was that the ball—a near Texas leaguer off Ryan's bat—was not hit an inch or so farther. As it was, the Nat second sacker tore into short center and made a truly sensational play when he snared the ball in his very finger-tips by an over-the-shoulder grab.

The Giants did not score in this round, but this catch prevented them from doing so, for both Fitzsimmons and Critz singled later in the inning.

Break No. 3 gave the Nats their fourth and final run of the pastime. It caused a lot of excitement, especially among the fans keeping a technical score, who were doubtful whether an error should be charged to Catcher Mancuso or whether Sewell, the Nats' rather heavy-footed receiver, should be credited with a stolen base.

Trapped Between Sacks.

The play in question came in the seventh. One was out, Sewell was on first and Whitehill was at bat. The latter was ordered to try to sacrifice and Sewell was breaking for second with each pitch. His second break was too long and, seeing that he was trapped, Sewell continued on to second. Mancuso threw to first, however, and his peg was low and bounded off of Terry's glove.

Sewell was credited with a stolen base. This break put him on second; he took third on Whitehill's roller to Critz, and scored on Myer's third safety of the game. Thus the failure of the Giants to get Sewell, as they should have, meant another run for the Nats.

Baseball people consider errors as much a part of the game as they do outs and assists, so miscues should not be counted as breaks. But the Giants' nearest to a smile from Dame Fortune yesterday came when Cronin fumbled Moore's grasser in the eighth. One was out at the time and Pinch-hitter Pell had previously singled. It was an easy double-play and the muff put two on and gave the Giants their final cause for hope. Hope, however, was all it gave them, for Whitehill fielded Critz' tap and then Terry, boss man of the Giants, popped to Sewell to end the round.

Mrs. Clark Winner Of A. & N. Club Title

Mrs. David H. Clark won the Army and Navy Country Club women's golf championship yesterday by defeating Mrs. R. H. Lee, 7 and 6 in the finals.

Mrs. Lee was powerless before the brilliant stroking of the former Virginia women's champion, who played her shots with remarkable consistency. Only a 9 on the fourteenth hole, where she hooked her drive into the water, prevented Mrs. Clark from cracking 80. She finished with an 82.

Mrs. Clark will enter the Middle Atlantic women's golf championship at Richmond, Va., starting October 16.

Mrs. Pray Wins Medal In Manor Club Playoff

Mrs. L. G. Pray, former champion, defeated Mrs. J. W. Harvey, jr., yesterday in the play-off for the medal prize in the Manor Club women's golf championship. They tied last week with scores of 94 each. Yesterday Mrs. Pray scored a 91, while Mrs. Harvey did not turn in her card.

The tournament was won by Mrs. Mack Myers, who defeated Mrs. Howard Simons in the finals.

Nats Regain Prestige, Win Over Foe Behind Whitehill

ing staff, the Nats found a sedative for Giant rambunctiousness. Backed by the wiles and guile acquired by ten years' service in the big leagues, Whitehill left-handed the Giants into submission, cut them off with five hits—all singles—and recorded the first shutout of the series.

They shook those four runs loose from Fred Fitzsimmons, huge Giant right-hander, by rising in their batting might and pounding nine base hits to all corners of the premises in an attack led by the goat of the first game, Buddy Myers, a cohero of the second.

Early Two-Run Lead.

They leaped at the collective throats of the Giants in that first inning on destruction bent, presented Whitehill with a two-run lead, and then performed behind him like sprightly nymphs, or wraiths, to cut down New York base hits, to deliver to Whitehill his shutout triumph.

And Whitehill the while was mowing down the Giants with his scythe-like left hand that defied the sluggers in the line-up—Ott and Terry—who hit yesterday for a grand average of .000 against the Nats' southpaw. His wide-sweeping curve slid beyond their bats with eccentric dips all afternoon. His fast ball left them gasping, and he gave no quarter.

As early as the second inning, the 25,727 Washington fans were hurling their derision as the Giants were swinging with no apparent damage to Whitehill's offerings. And, while his mates builded those two runs of the first inning into a 4-to-0 lead by the seventh, Whitehill was allowing the New York Club one solitary single in the last five innings.

Myers Redeems Self.

At the outset did the Nats' heavy artillery begin to boom against the so-called fast knuckle-ball of Fred Fitzsimmons. Back on his native heath, Buddy Myer, the goat of the first series game, gained instant redemption in the eyes of Washington fans when he spanked Fitzsimmons first pitch into left field for a clean single.

They had the one-two punch, did the Nats yesterday. Goose Goslin followed that sock of Myer's with a bewhiskered double high against the anthracite sign in right field, a dozen feet shy of a home run. Frustration then reared its ugly head as Heinie Manush popped a fly to Shortstop Ryan, but presently the Nats scored.

A faint essence of horse shoes surrounded that first run when Fitzsimmons slipped in fielding Cronin's easy roller near the box and failed to recover in time to catch Myer speeding toward the plate. He did throw Cronin out at first as Manush raced to third.

Came Back For More.

And then Fred Schulte swing on a fast ball. A two-base hit that rattled into right field, scoring Manush with the second run of the inning. Thus the Nats had given Whitehill his two run lead.

Having tasted Giant blood, the Nats came back for more in the second—one more. Ossie Bluege, hitless thus far in the series, smacked a screaming double over third base. To third he went as Sewell grounded to Critz. Darting for the plate as Whitehill bunted, he scrammed back to third safely ahead of Fitzsimmons' throw to Jackson, and Whitehill was safe on first. Then did Myer insert his second straight hit, a whistling double that nigh tore the glove from Manager Bill Terry, and Bluege scored.

Ruthlessly and relentlessly did the Nats cut down the Giants in protecting that lead they had given Whitehill to nurse. A single by Davis, a wild pitch and a walk had put runners on first and second with none out in the second inning. Into the breach rushed Joe Cronin to scoop up a ground ball and launch a double execution of the Giants.

Nats Field Well.

Yesterday's game was rampant with the fielding feats of the Nats. Out into center field rushed Buddy Myer at the start of the third to make a whirling-dervish, one-handed catch of a soft line drive by Ryan that bore all the ear-marks of a safe hit. And then, after Fitzsimmons had singled, Joe Cronin raced onto the lawn to convert Joe Moore's grounder into a sweet double play, the Nats' second in two innings.

Inning by inning, the Nats serveo Whitehill with their splendid fielding feats. With victory seemingly assured, a shutout for the pitcher seemingly became an obsession with the Nats.

For three innings the Giants had gone hitless. And then Pinch Hitter Peel singled with one out in the eighth. The irrepressible Moore drove a soft grounder to Cronin, a double-play ball if there ever was one. And then the Nats made their only lapse. Overzealous to start a twin killing, Cronin muffed the ball. Two on, one out. Shutout dreams were fading, with the top of the Giants' batting order present.

Rises to Occasion.

And then Whitehill rose to his greatness. Critz he forced to hit into the box and started the putout at first base. Manager Bill Terry caused him no qualms. A high foul to Luke Sewell and the side was retired.

The Nats retaliated threat for threat in that eighth with the poignant distinction that the Nats made good. With one out, Luke Sewell made his first hit of the series, a single over second. Trapped off first base, he scrambled to second as Catcher Mancuso threw wildly to Terry. When Whitehill grounded to Critz, Sewell went to third, there to await the product of Buddy Myer.

Myer did not come back to Washington to fail yesterday. His third hit of the day he rocketed into right center field to bring Sewell home with that fourth run.

Bluege Brilliant.

Came the ninth. Whitehill issued his second walk of the day to Ott. Here again, with none out, his shutout bid was menaced. But Ossie Bluege was present. Davis rapped a scorching grounder toward third base. Like a cat, Bluege pounced upon it, like a juggernaut he heaved it to first base for the out. Travis Jackson smashed a screaming grounder toward left field. A glove reached out. It was Bluege's. Thrown out at first was Travis Jackson.

Ott had advanced as far as third on these two plays and Mancuso was up. Into left field Mancuso looped a long fly. Manush was present, however, and thus ended the ball game—what a ball game.

Michigan Sets Record For Alumni Bowlers

Damon, of the Michigan pin crew, also set a new high league record with a game of 162, and also annexed the highest league set for the year, 398.

completing a double-play. One run, two hits, no errors, one left.

THIRD INNING.

Giants—Ryan hit a looping drive that Myer caught with his gloved hand in short right center. Fitzsimmons slashed a base hit on a drive that bounced off Cronin's arm. Moore hit the first ball pitched to Cronin and Fitzsimmons was forced at second, Cronin to Myer, but Moore beat the relay to first. Critz singled sharply over second and Moore raced all the way to third. Terry grounded out to Kuhel unassisted. No runs, two hits, no errors, two left.

Nats—Manush grounded to Ryan and was thrown out at first. Cronin dribbled a grounder to Critz for an easy putout. Schulte poked a hit past Terry for a single. Kuhel grounded to Jackson and Schulte was forced out at second on the throw to Critz. No runs, one hit, no error, one left.

FOURTH INNING.

FIFTH INNING.

Giants—Ryan grounded out on the first ball pitched, as Whitehill made a leaping one-hand stop and then threw to first. Fitzsimmons grounded out, Bluege to Kuhel. Moore bunted to Whitehill and was thrown out at first. No runs, no hits, no errors, none left.

Nats—Myer fanned. Goslin lifted a high fly to Davis, who took the ball in right center. Manush hoisted to Ott. No runs, no hits, no errors, none left.

SIXTH INNING.

Nats—Cronin cracked a single to right field. Schulte lifted a short foul that Terry grabbed. Kuhel—Critz made a circus stop, backhanded, on Kuhel's sharp grounder and tossed to Ryan for a force-out of Cronin at second base. Kuhel reached first. Bluege—Kuhel was thrown out trying to steal, Mancuso to Ryan. No runs, one hit, no errors, none left.

SEVENTH INNING.

Giants—Davis rolled to Whitehill, who made an easy putout at first. Jackson clouted a long fly to Manush. Mancuso rapped a grounder to Bluege and was tossed out. No runs, no hits, no errors, none left.

Nats—Bluege popped to Terry. Sewell dribbled a roller that Ryan failed to stop near second base and it went for a single. Sewell stole second. Whitehill rolled out, Critz to Terry, Sewell advancing to third. Myer singled to right, Sewell scoring. Goslin fanned. One run, two hits, no errors, none left.

EIGHTH INNING.

Giants—Ryan flied to Goslin. Homer Peel batted for Fitzsimmons. Peel singled sharply over Cronin's head. Moore rolled to Cronin, who made a bad fumble for an error and all hands were safe, with Peel on second and Moore on first. Critz rolled to Whitehill, who threw to first as Peel raced to third and Moore reached second on the putout. Terry lifted a fly that Sewell caught in front of the plate. No runs, one hit, one error, two left.

Nats—Herman Bell went to the box for the Giants. Manush flied out to Moore. Cronin grounded sharply to Ryan and was thrown out at first. Schulte drove a long clout to Davis. No runs, no hits, no errors, none left.

NINTH INNING

Giants—Ott walked. Davis grounded out on a fast play, Bluege to Kuhel as Ott ran to second. Jackson grounded to Bluege to make the putout at first. Ott reached third. Mancuso flied out to Manush. No runs, no hits, no errors, one left.

Jamestown's Race With Winooka Off

Baltimore, Md., Oct. 5 (AP).—Chances of Winooka, Australian sprint champion, meeting George D. Widener's Jamestown in a match appeared remote today with the announcement of Andrew J. Cummings, president of the Maryland State Fair, that the association did not see its way clear to arrange such a race at Laurel.

The race was in the process of formation to meet the requirements of C. V. Whitney, who stipulated that Winooka prove his quality against a top-notch American horse before meeting Equipoise in a proposed match race at Belmont Park, November 7.

There was a loud call through the amplifiers for the judge to present himself at the President's box, which was decorated with bunting at the north end of the Nationals' dugout. If the judge ever got there, he was swallowed up in the swirling throng as President Roosevelt, with his naval and military aids, arrived, greeted by enthusiastic applause.

Sun Breaks Through.

About this time, the drizzle ceased, the brisk north wind blew away the rain clouds, a rather anemic sun touched up the playing field to emerald warmth, and the game began. This happy circumstance put an end to an unconscious bit of sacrilege on the part of the photographers in an overhanging box above the Washington bench who had been blandly using one of the large American flags put up to decorate the stadium as an improvised roof against the showers.

An Army band in bright blue-gray tunics and white trousers strutted bravely and tunefully through the last of the drizzle, seeming to drive away the downpour with cheery music which fell upon grateful ears, into which an earlier band had been dinning the mournful reiteration of "Stormy Weather."

After the playing of the National Anthem, the big American flag which had been raised in center field was lowered to halfstaff out of respect to President Bill Veeck, of the Chicago Cubs, whose death saddened many of those gathered here for the series.

From the Washington fans' viewpoint, the game which followed could hardly have been more satisfactory.

Myer Atones for Errors.

After Whitehill had demonstrated his ability to set the Giants down in short order, the American League champions went right to work. Buddy Myer, despite the memory of those three errors in the opening game, was warmly applauded when he went to bat and Buddy responded nobly with a single to left. And when Goslin bounced a double off the high right field wall and both he and Myer scored on Fred Schulte's double, the roar of the crowd had that victory tang which it never was to lose throughout the afternoon.

Another of the Nationals who had come back from New York under somewhat of a cloud proved a real hero yesterday, and got his reward in the warm support of the fans. Oswald Bluege, who had been fanned in pinches at the start of the series, banged out a lusty double to score a moment later on Myer's second hit of the day in the next inning. While the fourth Washington counter was registered as a result of another spanking single from Buddy Myer's bat, putting Buddy and Bluege right back into a high place in the affection of their home-town fans.

Defensively, the Nats were nearly letter perfect, and late last night a long distance call from New York evoked the highly interesting information that Gotham gamblers do not rate the chances of their Giants any too high. If crowd psychology can pull a team through—and it's been done—the Nationals are quite likely to be hoisting a big blue pennant, reading "World's Champions, 1933," some day next spring.

University, Va., Oct. 5 (AP).—After a three-quarter hour signal drill devoted mainly to signal practice, a University of Virginia football squad of 25 left this afternoon for Columbus to play Ohio State Saturday.

with the Nats yesterday. Perhaps because they were so much the underdogs, perhaps because they played baseball better calculated to interest an enthusiast, or even perhaps because their line-up boasted the presence of baseball's forgotten man—Ossie Bluege.

Excited Over Play.

The spectator from the White House enthused greatly over the best baseball displayed, and ignored completely the few not-so-good plays that cropped up. He bounced up and down excitedly like a small boy in the first inning when Fred Schulte doubled, driving in Goslin, following intently the flying Dutchman's progress to second. He refused to enthuse over Fitzsimmon's near error that was recovered in time to peg Cronin out at first, but allowed Myer to score.

Heinie Manush's spectacular running catch of Mel Ott's long fly to left field in the second was honored by prolonged Presidential applause. Mr. Roosevelt also enthused over Buddy Myer's one-hand running catch of Ryan's Texas Leaguer in the third.

Applauds Sewell's Catch.

Only once was he fooled into showing enthusiasm for a spectacular but not so difficult play. When Luke Sewell caught Terry's almost straight up pop in the eighth spectator Roosevelt applauded—as did the 25,726 other fans.

Came the holiday's finish and Franklin Delano Roosevelt again was surrounded by gold braid and escorted to the waiting car. He waved to the crowd, displayed the familiar Roosevelt smile, settled back against the cushions and Frank Roosevelt, baseball fan, was no more by the time the White House car bearing Franklin Delano Roosevelt, President of the United States, reached the ball park exit.

Safe by the proverbial mile. Joe Moore, fleet outfielder of the Giants, becomes the first New Yorker to see third base yesterday when he advanced from first on Critz's single to center field. Moore has bared his teeth for his slide into the bag as Ossie Bluege takes the throw from Schulte which is far off line. Moore perished on third base as Whitehill mowed down Manager Bill Terry.

A victim of Whitehill's arm. Joe Moore reaches first base in the fifth inning, but too late. Kuhel already has the ball from Whitehill, who fielded Moore's grounder into the box.

Kuhel safe at first base, but that's only half of the story told by the picture. Joe Gronin has been forced out at second in the sixth inning, and Blondy Ryan is attempting a double play while Second Baseman Critz ducks from the range of the ball.

Talking it over before the game. Goose Goslin and little Bobby Stewart, son of the Nats' southpaw pitcher, tell each other the Giants aren't so hot. Whose afraid of the big bad Giants? says Bobby. And the Goose Smiles in agreement.

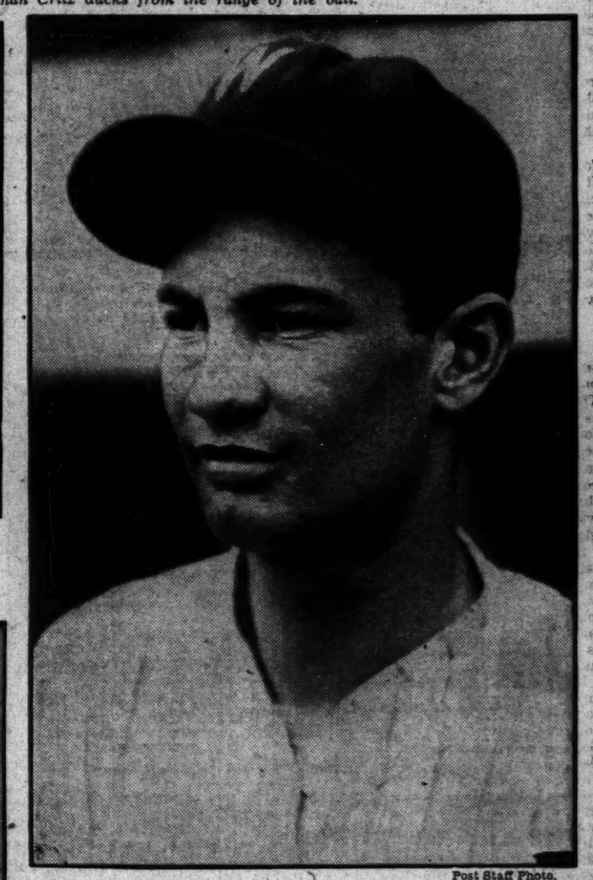
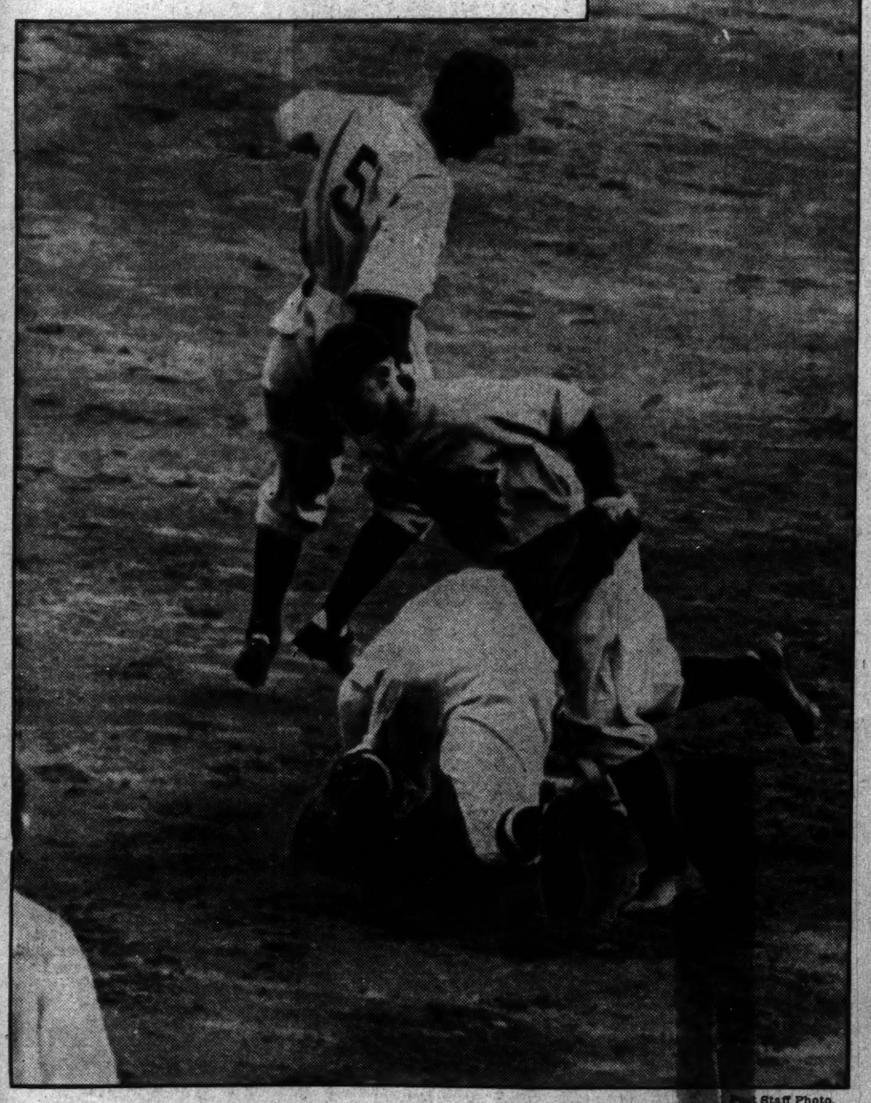
When Washington's hopes sagged. Joe Cronin's error in the eighth inning on Moore's grounder that allowed Peel to slide into second safely with none out and threaten Whitehill's shutout attempt. The ball is seen on the ground after Cronin fumbled in an overanxious attempt to turn it into a double play. Buddy Myer stands ready to cover second. Whitehill was not feazed by the situation and turned the Giants back runless.



Post Staff Photo.

Redeems himself. Buddy Myer, goat of the first game, who was the hero yesterday when the Nats came out of the mire with Myer. He, it was, who launched that first-inning rally, who drove in two of the Nats' four runs, scored a third and made three hits.



Post Staff Photo.

Fred Schulte trapped by Giants. Caught between bases on Kuhel's sharp grounder in the first inning, Schulte is seen being tagged by Second Baseman Critz who took Jackson's throw and helped cut short the Washington rally that accounted for two runs at the start.

Cutting the Giants down with a double play. Mancuso out at first base as Kuhel takes a throw from Myer, who took a throw from Cronin after the Nats' manager had fielded Jackson's hot grounder in the third inning.

Mate Wins Laurel Feature, Coming Within Fifth of Second of Track Mark

Spring Steel Second by Length

Even Money Favorite Is Ridden Impressively by Workman.

LAUREL, RACE TRACK, Md., Oct. 5 (AP).—A. C. Bostwick's Mate, stake-winning contemporary of Equipoise and Twenty Grand, returned to his best form when he whirled a mile and a sixteenth in 1:43 3-5, just a fifth of a second slower than the track record, to win the featured Tyrone Purse here this afternoon. S. W. Labrot's Spring Steel was second and Mrs. John Hertz's Watch Him third in the field of five.

Mate was an even-money favorite. He accomplished his task impressively under Jockey Sonny Workman's steady handling. The veteran rider never drew his whip on the 5-year-old son of Prince Pal to establish a winning of a length, going away.

Spring Steel sprinted into the lead from the barrier. Workman placed Mate in closest attendance and rated the Bostwick horse with admirable confidence for 6 furlongs. When he called upon Mate the latter moved sharply on the gray Labrot gelding, coming to the outside of the latter on entering the front path.

Mate took command at the furlong pole, and, although Spring Steel held on courageously, the Bostwick horse had him well subdued through the final sixteenth of a mile.

The famous thoroughbred Lexington, of the equally famous Woodburn Farm, won his right to be known as the greatest thoroughbred ever produced in America by the turf victories of his sons and daughters and of their sons and daughters.

Lexington himself was the sire of 236 winning horses. In 16 different years the races won by his progeny topped all others, and he was the premier sire. He even held that record three years after his death.

The male line in direct descent of Lexington has died out, but through brood mares his blood has been transmitted to many of the great lines of today's thoroughbreds.

G. W. and North Dakota Meet in Intersectional Fray Tonight at Grand Forks

All District Teams Out Of Town

C. U. to Play Holy Cross Tomorrow in Most Important Test.

G. U. and Md. to Face Canisius and V. P. I. Over Week-End.

WITH George Washington already within the enemy's domain awaiting the signal that will send it into battle, and Catholic U. packed aboard a northward-bound train, Georgetown and Maryland were packing their togs last night, ready to follow suit. Tomorrow American U. and Gallaudet hit the gridpath, leaving District fandom with only the world series to satisfy its athletic appetite.

Tonight G. W. squares off with North Dakota in an intersectional scuffle at Grand Forks. The Nodaks are taking the game very seriously and, judging from press reports from the Northwest, regard the Colonials as one of the outstanding Eastern elevens. G. W. supporters concur in that opinion, but the coaches have reserved their opinion until after the game.

Plays Holy Cross.

Catholic U. is bound for Worcester and its most important foe of the year—Holy Cross, whom they play tomorrow. Before leaving, Coach Bergman said that the Cardinals stood an excellent chance of bringing home the fatback, but only if they play their best ball of the year.

Georgetown leaves tonight for Buffalo, arriving tomorrow in time for a warm-up drill before Sunday's game with Canisius. A squad of 30 players, headed by Coach Jack Hagerty, will make the trip.

Maryland will be shy a regular tackle when it squares off with Virginia Poly tomorrow afternoon at Norfolk, as Ed Minion suffered a broken hand yesterday in practice. Facing defeat, the Terps are prepared to make the best of a bad situation and the Techmen are going to need all their strength and tricks to bag the verdict.

Cronin's Pep Talk Made Nats Fight

An artist could draw a most effective "before and after" picture of the mental attitude of the Washington players when they first showed up at the park and again when they left their dressing room for the game.

Before the meeting the boys were walking around in circles talking to themselves and to each other. There was no joking and the nervous tension seemed to almost electrify the room. The boys' heads were not exactly down, but they were far from being up. Something was needed and Dr. Cronin and his pep tonic seemed to be it.

Worked Charm at Once.

Just what Cronin told his charges is not known, for these meetings are as secret as the Masonic password. But what Joe said to his charges—and how he said it—changed his mates from a rather dejected to an inspired baseball team.

Entering the locker-room following Cronin's talk, the writer found Pitcher Earl Whitehill, who was so effective in the box later, mopping his manly brow with cracked ice—a habit of his before all games in which he pitches. Pitcher Al Crowder, Outfielder Goose Goslin and First Baseman Joe Kuhel were quietly playing a game of pitch. Pitcher Jack Russell was tenderly patting the right wrist he injured in the first game of the set and telling all interested that he was again rady to "die for dear old Rutgers." Even Trainer Mike Martin, who worries twice as much as do any of the players, was calm and collected.

All were in high spirits again and, despite the fact that there was some joking, there was a marked air of determination about each and every player.

Rookies Also Cheered.

Cronin himself was not satisfied with merely talking to the boys, but he was fluttering about like a butterfly, patting this player on the back and then that one. None, including the rookies, escaped the notice of the young Nat leader, who has enough spirit, fight and determination to never give up himself and to never let his charges do it either.

Needless to say, conditions were entirely changed after the game was over and the victory tucked away in the Nats' bat bag.

New Mexico Invited.

Mexico Oct. 5 (AP).—The University of Mexico has invited the University of New Mexico, at Albuquerque, to play a football game here October 14 or 21 for the benefit of Tampico flood and storm sufferers. The University of Louisiana is coming here for a game November 5.

Spencer Faces Beach Today In Finals

Baltimoreans Will Begin 36-Hole Wind-Up at 10 O'clock.

GOLF CHAMPIONS are not repeating in this season of upsets, but if Glenn Spencer, prodigious tee-shot artist from the Maryland Country Club, Baltimore, continues his rock-steady shooting in today's Middle Atlantic P. G. A. finals at Chevy Chase against a fellow townsman, Ralph Beach, of Suburban, he may retain his laurels.

Spencer yesterday breezed through two matches to reach the final round. He eliminated Al Trader, Manor pro, 2 and 1, in the morning, and steamed along in par fashion while disposing of Mel Shorey, of East Potomac, in the semifinals, 3 and 2.

Beach, beaten recently by Al Houghton for the Maryland State open crown, trimmed Alec Taylor, of Rolling Road, 3 and 1, and Arthur B. Thorn, former Woodmont tutor, 5 and 3.

The championship battle of 36 holes wil begin at 10 a. m. and will be resumed at 2 p. m.

Results:

Second round—Glenn Spencer (Maryland C. C.) defeated Al Treder (Manor), 4 and 2; Mel Shorey (East Potomac) defeated Charlie Betsehler (Rodgers Forge), 4 and 2; Arthur B. Thorn (unattached) defeated Cliff Spencer (Beaver Dam), 1 up, 19 holes; Ralph Beach (Suburban) defeated Alec Taylor (Rolling Road), 3 and 1.

Semifinals—Spencer defeated Shorey, 3 and 2; Beach defeated Thorn, 5 and 3.

Series Notes

All three of the world series games ended promptly at 3:45 p. m.

Will Hays smiled his way through the entire game from one of the lower boxes.

The world's champion American League rooter, one Patsy O'Toole, of Detroit, had just gotten nicely settled near the President's box when he had to move. But the rabid rooter did get into the locker room after the game, and did get a ball autographed by all the players—with a borrowed fountain pen.

Heinie Manush caught the ball that President Roosevelt threw out, but was too bashful to take it up to the Chief Executive to be autographed. A kindly, and less retiring policeman standing nearby carried the pellet to the President for his signature.

The barrier at the Nats' locker room was thrown up so tightly during the game that Clark Griffith had difficulty getting in to reach the Nats' dugout. He finally crashed—with the able assistance of Bill Richardson, the club's vice president, and a flock of ushers.

Bobby Stewart, Walter's 7-year-old son, swathed in a Nats' uniform several sizes too large for him, acted as assistant bat boy yesterday. A large lucky 7 covered his back.

The best-decorated, if not the best-dressed, fan present wore a straw hat plastered with Nats' stickers, half a dozen Joe Cronin buttons on his shirt and coat—and carried a cane.

G. H. Turner, who has never missed a world series, came all the way from Mexico City for the games.

The dozen condemned men awaiting execution in the District Jail are hearing the series over the radio. Facilities for picking up the broadcasts were provided by local radio concerns.

Commissioner Kenesaw Mountain Landis parked his chin on the rail, in his customary manner, in a lower box near the Giants' dugout.

Joe Cronin gave himself a big, derisive smile as he trotted in to Whitehill with the ball he fumbled in the eighth inning for the only error of the game.

Steele Drops McMillan in Odd Bout

Puzzling Decision Given in Match Lasting Hour; "Wild Man" Tamed.

APPROXIMATELY 4,000 rassle addicts, shunted to the Auditorium as the indoor season opened there last night, left the hall wondering what it was all about when the feature match between Ray Steele and Jim McMillan ended.

The bout had gone an hour and a quarter, both men were groggy and tottering, when Steele suddenly clamped a punishing arm lock on McMillan. The latter locked one leg between the upper and lower ropes and Referee Ed Brockman, brought on from Baltimore, called time out and started untangling McMillan.

Meanwhile, Steele flopped back on top of McMillan and, when the latter twisted his other leg between the ropes, Brockman gently patted Steele on the back and left the arena. Imagine the embarrassment of the rasslers and also of the fans, none of whom seemed to know the answer. Finally, it was generally decided that Steele won—on a new hold called "the referee's bungle" and all hands called it a night and went home. It was a good bout most of the time, but the result was not conclusive.

The semifinal attracted considerable interest. It pitted George Zaharias againt Ivan Zeniaki, called the "Siberian wildman." In appearance, Zeniaki looked like one of the Smith Brothers in their younger days. He was stronger than Zaharias but the latter tamed him with several gentle kneeings and straight punches to the stomach and then forced him to call it quits when he applied a punishing crab hold. The time was 10 minutes.

In the other bouts, John Humberto downed Lou Plummer in 12½ minutes, Paul Boesch surprised by flopping Sol Slagel in 10, and Swede Olsen and Karl Davis battled to a rough and bloody half-hour draw.

Pegler

Finds Nats Won Because They at Last Took Giants Seriously.

By Westbrook Pegler.

IT is a strange thing that in a city as intensely home-town about a ball club as the National Capital is about the Nationals, the citizens failed to claim some thousands of seats in the boys' size local ballyard for the first home game of the first world series played here since 1925. Even with the President of the U. S. A. attending to heave out the first ball and lend himself, the warmth of his optimistic smile and the prestige of his office to the popular hokum, the absentees numbered about 5,000.

They missed the first victory which their ball club has won in the three thus far played. Earl Whitehill, a left-hander, who has been a major league jobholder for some years, pitched the shutout and if you were a stranger in Washington at this time you would be wise to clap your hands to your ears to spare your drums some of the wear and tear of the hero-worship which is sure to bust loose in the local journals in celebration of his triumph. Do you think triumph is too big a word for his winning of this ball game? Well, triumph is just no word for it at all. Triumph has the sound of a knock compared to some of the words which will be used to describe Earl Whitehill's job of work. In fact, I expect the locals will be making themselves up some new glory-words in the effort to give it a name, for in all my time of trouping from one town to another for world series shows in the fall, I never have seen any group of my colleagues so swept away on the tide of emotion as my friends in Washington are just now.

Vacancies in Bleachers.

A baseball expert is not just a journalist in Washington but an apologist, a free-lance manager and a rooter for the home ball club, which is a business firm conducted by Clark Griffith, an old ball player. The expert picks them to win, of course, and when they do not win, as happened two days running in New York, he must explain that they did not get the breaks, observe that tomorrow is another day, insist that he is not weakening on them and wind up with a pep talk to the citizens and the team. Such enthusiasm as this I have not seen before in the newspaper business.

Notwithstanding the weeks of intensive ballyhoo and hero-worship which preceded the first home game of the world series, the bleachers were not more than half full and there were vacancies in the wings of the grand stand. I heard this state of affairs attributed to various causes. There was the rain, for one thing. It rained quite a brisk splatter along toward 1 p. m. and there was a half-hour or so when, looking at the sky and the downpour, you would have guessed there would be no game. But the sun came out pretty soon and the canvasmen skinned off the big, earth-colored waterproof sheet which was protecting the infield.

There was the radio, too. The citizens were tuning in at home or gathering in the barber shops, lunch rooms and speakeasies in the District and in all the nearby Maryland and Virginia country to attend the world series by ear.

Fans Shy at $3.30 Price.

Then, finally, there was the price of bleacher tickets. Mr. Griffith had overestimated the citizen's capacity or desire to pay. He was asking $3.30 for these steerage accommodations, the same that retailed for $1.10 in New York earlier in the week and when the turnstile readings were taken he had to eat most of his tickets, as they say in the amusement trade. Many of the citizens did not worship their heroes $3.30 worth.

The game was late in starting and this could have been due to the state of the weather, although the weather was just as clear and certain 15 minutes before as it was 15 minutes later when the sport began. There used to be an old fellow in the horse-park business who would delay his races and keep the horses tossing and twitching as long as there seemed to be a single customer who might yet sidle up to the $2 mutuel window.

I could be mistaken, but I thought I saw a man up on the roof of the ball-yard peering hither and yon with a spy-glass along toward game-time yesterday, scanning the streets for any possible belated customer.

Players More Dashing.

The boys seemed much more dashing and efficient yesterday than they had been in New York, but they had learned a hard lesson. They went to New York inflated by the sort of praise which I have been referring to and it did not seem to have occurred to them that any pitcher could throw the ball past them. Some of the old American League G. A. R.'s who are no longer foolishly partisan since they quit playing ball and began to fraternize with their old enemies of the National League, had told the Washington athletes that they were very dumb to take the Giants lightly. But they had been reading of themselves as supermen so long that they could not make an adjustment until Carl Hubbell and Hal Schumacher had beaten them twice.

This time they were facing the Giants' No. 3 pitcher, Freddie Fitzsimmons, and they were just good enough to lick him, but not by much.

Seeing Game Won Via Parisian Eyes

know, dear reader, that anyone in France who has a slightest touch of culture knows the names of these two great sons of America, "Babe" Ruth and "Bobby" Jones, so I asked my neighbour, "Where is Babe Ruth," pointing to the players who had just entered the field.

He answered with indignation, "Don't you know that he passed away shortly after March 4, when our "Senators" trounced the Yankees and the Tammany men?" He was of the old administration and what you all know is a "New Deal."

So I decided to watch the play. But it is not fair. One grey fellow against nine white opponents. What can he do? But he is handling a big thick stick. That may help him to clear his way through his innumerable opponents. I am wrong again, for I notice that whenever he starts running towards one of the bases where a white giant is waiting for him, he throws it away. I just said that the grey fellow was alone against all the others. It is not quite true, as one of the others whom the crowd calls, "the catcher," is coiled behind him and seems to tell "the batter": "Don't worry, old pal! If you miss the ball, I'll catch it."

Much Too Complicated.

And indeed he catches it. And how!

The "pitcher", as I understand it, is he who pauses too much between throwing the balls. Spitting in his hands, rubbing it with earth and dust, then pasting the ball, he seemed to take lots of his time.

I must say I admired the rapidity of his ball. These fellows really make wonders. But you see too little of that. Between two beautiful strokes there are too many pauses.

And also it is too complicated, at least for me. I realize the idea is to bat the ball as far away as possible and then run towards one base before the ball comes back, and so on, until you come back to your batting place, which I imagine must be the "home." But to whom must the ball come back? How is it the batter some times stays in, some times goes out? And what are the three poor fellows out in the field doing? They look like three more gentlemen listed among the 10,000,000 unemployed!

And the scoring! Honestly, I could not figure out who had won. In walking out, I asked a lady, who was red with excitement. Take my words, she looked daggers at me. I imagine now she must have been a New Yorker.

Jamaica Stake Won By Garden Message

Jamaica Race Track, Oct. 5 (AP). George H. Bostwick's consistent colt, Garden Message, after receding from 8 to 5 to 3 to 1 in the betting, ran as if he outclassed four rivals in the Eldorado Claiming Handicap here this afternoon.

The 3-year-old son of Messenger romped past the finish line five lengths in advance of F. M. Taylor's Help Me. Four lengths further back came C. V. Whitney's Volette to annex the show. Garden Message ran the mile and 70 yards in 1:43 1-5 over a sloppy track, which was exactly what the colt wanted.

Exciting School Clashes Set For Today

SCHOLASTIC bombshells will begin cracking this afternoon at 3:30 o'clock as two Capital elevens clash on home fields with opponents of long standing.

The fray between Central and Gonzaga appears to be the outstanding, but not far behind is the setto between Alexandria and Eastern.

This game will be the Catholic school eleven's first start, while Burt Coggin's crew has defeated Alexandria, Charlottesville Fives and Emerson handily.

Eastern will find the Virginians anything but a set-up. Central managed to eke out a 12-7 win three weeks ago, while Western was held to a six draw last Friday. The outcome should give local inter-high enthusiasts an idea of the relative strength of Eastern and Central as aspirants for the Capital championship.

In the prep school section, Calvert Hall meets Georgetown Prep at the Garrett Park arena, at 3:15. St. Albans, with an experienced back field, but green forward wall, will play Boys' Latin on the Cathedral field. Landon leaves town early today to meet St. Andrew's at Middletown, Del.

Irving Meets Russell At Alexandria Monday

The Alexandria Elks' boxing enterprise springs into activity Monday after a moribund two weeks, with a club fight card headed by Henry Irving and Danny Russell, of the Eastern Shore, in an eight-rounder. A six-round semifinal between Kellar Crawford and Bob Lowry will support the card, which will be rounded out by fours between Joe Raspi and Doug Swetnam, Jimmy Kelly and Jack Quigley and Joe Green vs. Feeby Shoemaker.

Wives of Players Are Best Dressed

sonny's mouth. "Eat the popcorn and watch the man run." That answered all of the boy's questions and complaints.

Retired Army and Navy officers, slightly awkward in civvies, with only their still imperious carriage to betray their military past, howled effectively for our side. They acted as though the game was a great relief from the void which comes when there are no orders to give or take.

One-Eye Connolly sat on the steps in section B. He pulled his grey cap well over his face and looked content. His gaze never left the field for a moment. A cop with a guide-book air about him pointed the gate-crasher out to those who would pause to listen, but One-Eye ignored his public consistently.

The Kingfish was present. At least, he looked like the Kingfish. He was large and portly and wore his spectacles with an air of authority. He had provided himself with a large brass school-bell. No throat-tearing cheering for him. He clanged the bell with vigor every time the Nationals scored.

Washington seemed to take its pets to the game. There were several dozen dogs there. Poodles and Bostons and Scotties. They all sat eagerly waiting for a cat or a bone to happen. Nothing did. Their owners pulled and tugged at their leashes. They ordered "Sit down, sir," in annoyed tones. The dogs, for the most part, sat.

A Scottie, with more enthusiasm than his master, scuttled toward the field with an eye on the ball. It took four policemen, his master and a helpful young woman to catch him. He sat in disgrace the rest of the game, moping beneath the seat.

There were lost children at the game. Inevitably, a few were separated from their parents. Small, curley-headed and very tear stained, a little girl of about 4 wept on a cop's blue coat front. Our police should be trained in children's dietary. Hot dogs and soda pop are fine for drying tears.

The young fan's mamma will probably sit up tonight with her child.

Several youngsters saw the game from the shoulder of a kindly cop. Long suffering, two or three of the policemen endured small heels dug into their chests and sticky hands clutching their caps out of shape.

When the sun finally decided to come out after that ominous shower just before the game, the bleachers unloaded their relief with plenty of lung power. The girls especially seemed pleased. Their clothers apparently were more on their minds than the game.

Four young things, high school age, perhaps, huddled under a blanket during the shower. They threw it off with a swish and a flourish when the weather cleared. They smoothed their bright plaid skirts, combed out their hair and went over their faces with powder puffs. And then they yelled.

The football team, which has them cheering for it this fall will be lucky

Chevy Chase Gets Lunn For State Finals Play

As a dramatic gesture, the Chevy Chase Golf Team, headed by its club chairman, Robert Stead, jr., yesterday made arrangements for Dick Lunn, 18-year-old District champion, to play for the local outfit against Hillendale Sunday at Rolling Road course in the finals of the Maryland State Golf Association team championship.

Mason Opposes Foley For President's Cup

W. Beverly Mason, jr., and T. M. Foley will clash in the finals of the President's Cup golf tournament at Chevy Chase. Mason yesterday eliminated G. E. Elliott, 6 and 5, and Foley won from A. C. Reed, 4 and 3.

In the resumption of play in the Perkins Plate tournament, H. R. Stanford defeated W. G. Brantley, 6 and 4; Gen. Frank R. Keefer defeated E. A. Hackman, 3 and 2; C. V. Wheeler defeated F. S. Wynn, 2 and 1, and W. G. Peter defeated E. I. Lewis, 3 and 2. C. B. Drake, Gen. R. H. Allen and C. B. McVay won their matches via the default route.

This Morning

With Shirley L. Povich.

LEADING with the chin isn't such an unpleasant sensation when the other guy misses. Well, the other guys missed at Griffith Stadium yesterday and Kid Povich is not so bloody, and still unbowed. Just when discretion looked the better part of valor and I was thinking seriously of withdrawing some of those remarks about the Giants, the Nats get back in the series.

Can the Giants take it? I don't mean the series. I mean, can they take it and come back? Methinks the Nats are en route to better things.

I've had a sneaking suspicion all along that the Nats are the better ball club. There, I've gone and done it again—leading with my chin, I mean. The bonds of habit are too strong, I guess. I was pirouetting on my heels for two days up in New York, but I guess I'll never learn. Anyway, that crack still goes.

Big, Bad Hubbell.

But I'm not ducking the tough ones. You can't twit a fellow who exposes his chin today to a guy like Hubbell. He's big and bad. Big and bad. He left an impression on me up at the Polo Grounds, that, somehow, stays with me. Well, I've gone and done it, so what?

But, somehow, the Nats, too, impressed me yesterday and flung a nice long spar, equipped with a saddle, to a drowning man. That was all very pleasing to the eye, these eyes particularly, the way the Nats were playing ball out there yesterday. Sorta reminded me of the way they won the pennant, by carrying the fight to the other fellow.

And Monte Weaver is a pretty good pitcher to tie to. Monte and I always did get along well, didn't we, Monte? And you wouldn't throw me down, would you, Monte? That was the trouble in those first two games. The Giants crossed me up and the Nats threw me down and I had more sensations than a runaway elevator.

Those Slugging Giants.

Somehow, I am reminded of that question I put earlier in the week: What are the Giants going to use for base hits? They didn't knock down any fences during the National League season, and as far as averages go they are not to be mentioned in the same inhalation with the Nats.

If you're asking me, the Giants were shown up yesterday for just what they are—a great fielding club, a great pitching club, but a lousee batting club. By tonight I may be eating those words, which on second thought, is better than second-guessing 'em. After all, I'm only giving myself one guess, youse guys.

Low and Outside.

But, if you're asking me, there's a lotta difference pitching baseballs in Griffith Stadium and pitching baseballs in the Polo Grounds. And that sorta levels things for the Nats when they play at home.

Down here, Washington's pitchers, and the Giants' too, don't have to attach a prayer to every fast ball. Down here, the outfield fences don't reach over into the diamond and pluck those popflies into their bosoms for home runs. Methinks it makes a difference.

Up in the Polo Grounds, where the Gi'nts play 77 games each season, their pitchers have become adept at throwing those low, outside curves. The Nats' pitchers haven't specialized on 'em. Keeping those balls low and outside to the Giant hitters wasn't so easy for the Nats' pitchers. This is supposed to be leading up to something, or, don't you follow me?

Pigeon That Disrupted Game Says: "I Helped Nats Win"

By the Pigeon
(As told to Frank Getty).

WELL, that's that.

I knew they could do it.

If I hadn't had a game left wing, I would have flown up to New York and taken a peck at those autogiros that were buzzing around over the Polo Grounds, disconcerting our boys.

Once the teams got down here where I could strut my stuff, I knew my Nats wouldn't have any trouble.

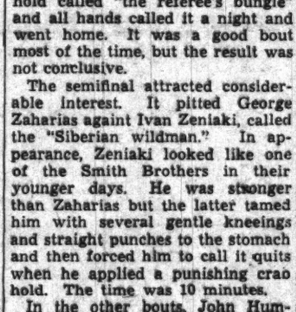
A lot of folks out there yesterday afternoon seemed surprised to see me in the infield. They don't know that I come from an old baseball family of pigeons.

Always Liked Boys Here.

Why, it was my great-great-grandfather who was flying over center field in Fenway Park back in 1912, when Fred Snodgrass, another of these pesky Giants, dropped that easy fly. We've always been American League supporters, pigeon and squab.

Yesterday's game looked like a cinch for the Nats to me after I'd had my first nibble at that grass over by third base. I could tell from the taste that the grass was just right for Oswald Bluege, and you saw what he did to those hard-hit ground balls.

Maybe you don't realize it, but when I zoomed past Earl Whitehill that time in the first inning, I told him, in my own pigeon English:



MR. PIGEON.

"Make them hit down to third base, Earl."

He Did and Ossie Did.

If you'll analyze the game, you'll find he did, and Ossie did the rest.

That fat Pfirman tried to run me right out of the park when the Giants were batting in the sixth, just after he'd seen me tipping a wing to Whitehill to make Hughie Critz roll one down to Bluege.

I didn't give him a tumble. He's only umpire-in-chief for a day; this afternoon he'll be way out back of first base, where the picking is very skimpy.

What's all this talk about "Blue Eagles?"

Look up my family record.

Serum Made To End Plague Killing Horses

Experts of Agriculture Department Aid Fight in Maryland Epidemic.

A serum to combat a malady affecting brains and spinal cords of horses, which caused 100 animals to died in Maryland a month ago, is being developed by the Department of Agriculture, it was announced yesterday.

While it is believed the malady is similar to cerebral spinal meningitis, the department is making extensive experiments to determine the exact cause. Another serum, developed in the West, where similar epidemic occurred, is being studied.

Similar epidemics swept Prince Georges County several years ago. Officials of the University of Maryland, where experiments also are underway, declared the fungus growth known as "ergot," to which they attribute the disease, is found more extensively after prolonged wet spells.

The department recommended isolation of affected animals and protection from mosquitoes and other insects suspected of spreading the disease.

More Officials Linked In Kansas Bond Probe

Topeka, Kans., Oct. 5 (AP).—The Kansas million-dollar bond forgery scandal, which resulted in resignation of the state treasurer by request of the governor, today drew the attention of a special legislative committee to offices of the State auditor and attorney general.

Chairman S. C. Bloss said his committee had in mind charges against both officials should evidence warrant.

Dismissed Air Pilot Wins Board Decision

The National Labor Board ruled yesterday that Wayne Williams, pilot dismissed by Transcontinental & Western Air Line allegedly for union activities, should be reinstated, according to the Associated Press.

The decision, handed down by Senator Wagner, board chairman, asserted the reasons given by the company for discharging Williams "did not justify his dismissal."

Needy Pupils Will Get Free Meals Daily

Surplus Agency Will Pay; Fairfax Schools Bar Outside Poor.

As the District Board of Public Welfare awaited an order from Emergency Relief Administrator Harry L. Hopkins to supply meals daily to destitute school children, the Fairfax County School Board barred wards of the local relief agency from county schools.

The children are those who have been shifted from squalid city homes to the country. They are boarded in private homes by the Welfare Board, which pays for food and clothing.

The Fairfax board claimed the action was necessary because of the overcrowded school conditions. The county has difficulty in caring for its own needs, the board said.

Meanwhile, Mrs. Henry Grattan Doyle, of the Distrct Board of Education, requested Superintendent of Schools Frank W. Ballou to determine how many children are being kept from school because of lack of clothing and food.

The Federal Surplus Relief Corporation, charged with supplying food and clothing to the needy, has ordered local relief agencies to supply a meal daily to all school children of families on their relief rolls. This order has not yet been received by the District board.

District emergency relief committee will make application within the next few days to the Federal Relief Administration for $250,000 on the basis of a third of expenditures during the last three months.

At a meeting of the committee yesterday it was decided to instruct Leroy A. Halbert, director, to weed out the less needy from the rolls rather than again to increase the weekly disbursements, now nearly $60,000.

The committee is frankly worried over the prospects of growing demands for aid during the fall and winter, according to Sidney F. Taliaferro, chairman.

"Should all or part of the 15 per cent pay cut be restored to Federal employes, however, the relief burden on the District will be considerably eased," Taliaferro said.

"Reconsideration of the Federal pay will immediately result in the placing of many jobless in household positions as many now cared for are domestics discharged for reasons of economy."

Tailor Shop Robbed.

Sawing through a rear door, thieves yesterday took $5 and $100 worth of clothing from the tailor shop of Mrs. Martha Peyton, 1918 Eleventh street northwest. She named a suspect.

Girl, 12, Kin of Sam Gompers, Ill and May Miss Unveiling

Shirley Gompers MacKay's Heart Will Break Unless She's There.

An attack of grippe threatens to mar the biggest day in the 12 years of Shirley Gompers MacKay. Tomorrow morning she is scheduled to unveil the memorial to her famous great-grandfather, Samuel Gompers, before President Roosevelt and thousands of people.

And last night, in a room smelling of salve and nose spray, she lay with a cold and fever. Programs are printed, and every detail completed, and there lies Shirley home with illness. She had to remain there yesterday when her parents, Dr. and Mrs. William H. MacKay, went to the world series game, but she didn't mind that so much.

Heartbreaking to Child.

But missing the unveiling, that will almost break her heart. The President of the United States, newsreel cameras, throngs of labor leaders and dignitaries and just plain folk, band music—she simply must get well.

Her only chance is for the fever to subside today and warm weather tomorrow, Shirley's father said last night. A physician at Mount Alto Hospital, he has been in constant attendance since Monday.

The remaining 1,200 green tickets not molested were recalled and white tickets printed hurriedly. These tickets, bearing a picture of Samuel Gompers, will be distributed instead. Delegates and guests will be admitted on their badges. No green tickets will be recognized.

Ring Starts Drive to End Unsafe Homes

"Disgrace to Charge Rent for Them," Declares Investigator.

An explanation as to why many dilapidated houses in the District have not been condemned will be sought by James Ring, special rent investigator for the Public Utilities Commission.

Ring said yesterday he was preparing a memorandum to the building inspector's office, asking detailed information on the number of houses recommended for condemnation and the action of the boards of survey.

Ring said he examined a row of houses in the Northeast which are unsafe. A building inspector had recommended their condemnation, but a board of survey had found them only 48 per cent dilapidated, and the law requires 50 per cent.

"It is a disgrace to charge any rent for houses such as these and others I have seen in Washington's alleys," Ring said.

He said he had been in the hospital and had not tasted the brew until Wednesday.

Then he went downtown and some friend gave him three bottles and he became drunk, he said.

Bricks Smash Shop Window In Barber War

Victim, Who Cut Price, Blames Competitors; 3 Suspects Freed.

Resulting from what police term a price-cutting war among Southeast Washington barbers, two large plate-glass windows were splintered by bricks early yesterday in a barber shop at 237 Pennsylvania avenue southeast.

The owner, Joseph Yanniello, who opened his shop Monday, advertising a 35 cent haircut, told police he blamed competitors who had warned him to maintain a 50 cent rate.

Three men taken into custody by Fourth Precinct police shortly after the volley of bricks was poured into the shop from a "large dark-colored sedan," were released when a witness failed to identify them.

Meanwhile, it was learned that barbers of the House of Representatives and House Office Building shops have adopted a flat rate of 25 cents on haircuts and 15 cents on shaves. Although carried on the Government pay roll, barbers in these shops occasionally give service to "some people who drop in" from the outside," the head barber disclosed.

This fact has incensed nearby operators, who have tried to maintain a higher and more uniform rate of prices, and who hold congressional shops have taken a large number of customers by slashing prices.

Yanniello declared many of his competitors who advertise the 50 cent rate, actually charge their regular customers only 35 cents. Because of that he decided to come out in the open with his price list, he said.

Haircut Code

Barbers Can't Agree on Price Schedule.

The National Recovery Administration announced yesterday it was searching for a fair haircut price.

Over 200 barbers' codes have been received by Deputy Administrator John Power and they represent but a fraction of the country's 250,000 barber shops.

The codes present all kinds of suggested prices. The average for the small town seems to be 35 cents for a haircut and 15 cents for a shave. In the big cities the suggested rates are 50 and 25 cents. But California has gone ahead and set 65 cents as the minimum for a haircut.
